REPORTED BATTLE BELOW HAGERSTOWN.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The Chambersburgh telegraph operator says that he heard firing all the afternoon from the vicinity of Hagerstown.

The Bulletin is out in an extra with the following:

HARRISBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 13—4 P. M.

"Men are wanted in companies. Philadelphia should respond immediately. There is no time for delay.

"A heavy battle has been progressing south of Hagerstown for the last hour. It is supposed to be between Jackson and the Union forces at Martinsburgh. We have been telegraphing all day for Home Guards and Grey Reserves, and hope they will report in companies, as all others do; after thinks done, they will be formed into regiments to suit them if possible, but in accordance with United States regulations. Send along the men.

The above dispatch has been sent by T. A. Scott, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and has been politely handed to us by Mr. E. C. Wharton, one of the Directors, who assures us that the Company are prepared to forward 10,000 men to Harrisburgh to-night.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13—7 P. M.

A dispatch has just been received from Col. THOMAS A. SCOTT, from Harrisburgh, stating that a battle is going on below Hagerstown between MILES' and JACKSON's forces, and calling on all troops to rush to Harrisburgh. Our citizens are making a prompt response. Hundreds of armed men are rushing through the streets to the Pennsylvania Railroad Depôt.

HURRYING FORWARD THE TROOPS.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The following dispatch has been received from Gov. CURTIN:

HARRISBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 13—2:30 P. M.

Contradict the report that no more troops are wanted in Harrisburgh at once.

I want troops at once, and in companies; cannot wait for formation of brigades or regiments.

We are pushing forward troops every hour.

A. G. CURTIN.

REPORTED RETREAT OF THE REBELS.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Sept. 13.

We have positive information that railroad communication was interrupted and the telegraph wires were cut between Harper's Ferry and Cumberland yesterday, by the rebels.

A reconnoissance to the vicinity of North Mountain, about seven miles south of Williamsport, encountered some rebel pickets. We killed and captured pickets.

It was discovered that Gen. LEE and JACKSON had crossed the Potomac River near Martinsburgh.

Gen. LONGSTREET, it was thought, would cross further up the river.

The whole rebel force is retreating across the Potomac.

THE REPORT DISCREDITED.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The reported retreat of JACKSON is not credited in well-informed circles here, and the active preparations of the Governor indicate that he does not put much trust in it. It is more probable that the rebel army has selected Williamsport as a base of operations, and is establishing connections with Virginia at that point.

HARRISBURGH, Penn., Saturday, Sept. 13.

The retreat of the entire rebel army across the Potomac River is not believed in official circles.

The sending of troops is urged as necessary.

OUR LATEST WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Sept. 13.

We have information that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridge over the Monocacy is not injured, and that trains can run between Baltimore and Frederick.

Firing was heard in that direction early this morning by persons in Rockville. A prisoner states that it was the rebels, covering their retreat.

THE O'CLOCK P. M.—The excitement here has died out, as the apparent danger to Washington is removed. It is believed that the rebel army of invasion is retreating before the National force, and that it will retire into Virginia.

LATEST REPORTS FROM BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, September 13.

Our information in regard to the crossing of the rebels over the Potomac River is from Cumberland, and from a most reliable source.

A dispatch from Frederick at noon to-day, says that heavy firing in the direction of Harper's Ferry commenced early this morning, and continued until 11 o'clock. It then ceased, and commenced again at noon.

Gen. HOWARD took possession of Frederick last night, and Gen. MCCLELLAN passed that city with his staff this morning.

A dispatch also says that we have captured the rebels' wagon trains.

Persons released by the rebels say that they told them that they were on their way to attack Harper's Ferry.

The impression at Frederick undoubtedly was that the commanding was at Harper's Ferry.

HEAVY FIRING HEARD AT GREENCASTLE AND CHAMBERSBURG.

HARRISBURGH, PENN., Saturday, Sept. 13.

Heavy artillery firing was heard at Greencastle and Chambersburg this morning in the direction of Williamsport.

The main body of the rebels do not appear to have gone to Hagerstown. Gen. LONGSTREET's Division, numbering from 20,000 to 30,000 men, is only there apparently, to supply forage and supplies for the bottom of the rebel army, which is at Boonsboro.

Outpickets have been driven in to the State line.

State troops continue to arrive, and leave for Chambersburgh as fast as transportation can be forwarded.

Gen. LEE is said to be at Hagerstown.

REPORTS FROM THE PRESS CORRESPONDENT.

UNIONTOWN, Md., Sept 13—Friday Evening.

We learn, through one of our correspondents that Gen. PLEASANTON reported this afternoon that the cavalry under his command crossed the Monocacy on Thursday, near the Potomac. They found no enemy in force, but saw a train of wagons with a large guard proceeding in the direction of Frederick.

There is no doubt that the troops under Gens. Stonewall JACKSON and LONGSTREET, who were at Frederick, have gone to Hagerstown.

Gen. HILL's Division left Adamstown yesterday, and is on its way toward the Point of Rocks.

Sugar-Loaf Mountain was occupied on that day by our forces. The rebel signal officers were captured.

Four regiments of rebel cavalry and one battery, under Gen. FITZHUGH LEE, who were located at New-Market, evacuated that point at 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

Everything shows that the rebels are leaving the Monocacy for Hagerstown.

What the intentions of the rebels are is unknown, but the impression is that they will not leave the State without a fight.

If the rebels do not dispute our passage of the Monocacy we shall be in Frederick to-morrow.

If the rebels want to fight all they have to do is to wait until we come up to them.

All our men are in good spirits, and have no doubts as to the result when they meet the enemy.

The rebel encampment is within eight miles of Frederick.

No rebels were to be found by our reconnoitering cavalry on Thursday morning.

Yesterday afternoon our cavalry entered Frederick, and found it deserted by the rebels.

Our forces have been very kindly treated by the people of Frederick County.

THE REBEL RAID ON HAGERSTOWN.

CHAMBERSBURGH, Thursday, Sept. 11.

The rebels entered Hagerstown at about 9 o'clock this morning. They proceeded at once to the railroad depôt and seized twelve hundred barrels of flour. They also commenced to tear up the track near the depôt.

The party consisted of about three hundred rebel cavalry, but a much larger force was supposed to be close behind.

Many of the inhabitants are reported as having welcomed the invaders with the greatest delight—the females by waving secesh flags and handkerchiefs from their windows, while the men sympathizers caused the arrest of all Union men.

The rebels also took possession of such stores as were pointed out to them as belonging to Union men and placed guards over them.

The rebels are said to be gathering in large supplies of goods, of which they stand greatly in need.

Some of the rebels who have been captured say that they have almost been starved, and that if they did not get supplies at once from this side of the Potomac, their army would not remain together long, as they were tired of fighting without anything to eat.

The United States Marshal, the Sheriff, and other officials left Hagerstown when the rebels entered the place, bringing away with them all the valuables in their different offices.

Hundreds of citizens also left the place, and the road for miles was lined with every description of vehicles filled with men principally, as they were more afraid of being forced to take the oath of allegiance to the Southern Confederacy, or of being carried off to Richmond, than of losing their property.

This town is filled with runaways, all of them very much excited, and each one telling what he saw and heard of the movements of the rebels.

Citizens who arrived to-day from Williamsport say that a very large rebel army is at that point, and it is supposed that they intend crossing there. The people are leaving their homes throughout that entire section of country, and crowding up this way toward Harrisburgh. But it is expected that the rebels will soon be driven out, as large bodies of troops are expected here soon from the northward, under the call of Gov. CURTIN.

The Anderson Cavalary are supplied with horses and other equipments, and, when they are prepared to take the field, we shall no doubt receive a good account of them, as they are one of the finest regiments in the service.

Nothing has been heard from Hagerstown up to 7 o'clock this evening, and it is believed that the rebels will not come this side of that place.

IS HARRISBURGH UNDER MARTIAL LAW?

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13.

A special dispatch to the Bulletin says:

"Harrisburgh is declared to be under martial law. Every able-bodied man is going to Chambersburgh."

HARRISBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The Mayor has issued a proclamation forbidding the citizens leaving town, under penalty of arrest.

Martial law has not been proclaimed.

THE EXCITEMENT IN PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The military excitement in this city is intense. A large number of armed citizens are leaving for Harrisburgh. Organized bodies of militia, numbering nearly 5,000, will leave to-morrow.

WHAT THE REBELS INTEND DOING.

HARRISBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The rebels claim that they have an army of ninety thousand men in Maryland; also, that they have an army of two hundred and twenty-five thousand men in Virginia, with which they intend menacing Washington, while the army of Maryland marks the northward invasion Pennsylvania.

IMPORTANT CAPTURE OF REBEL OFFICERS.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The Police made an important capture last night at the house of Dr. T. L. WILLIAMSON, seven miles from this city, on the Hooperstown Road. Having received information that some rebel officers from the invading army were being fêted by their friends, the Police proceeded thither and surrounded the house, and whilst those within were having a jolly good time, bagged the whole party, as follows:

Capt. HENRY GUEST, Company F, Stuart's Cavalry; GARDNER D. CARRETT, Lieut. Batty.

These men were disguised in citizens' dress.

The Police also seized Dr. WILLIAMSON, their entertainer, and the following gentlemen friends:

J. F. Hayward,	J. H. Buchanan,
Alexander Carey,	Martin McGraw.

The whole party were brought to this city and are now in close custody.

The Police were armed with rifles and prepared for any emergency.

The following booty was also found on the premises:

Two splendid horses, a sword, a gun, two revolvers, a large knife, a powder flask, some shoes, boots, flannel shirts, etc., intended for the rebels.

These rebel officers belong to this city. It is thought they will, as they justly should, meet the fate of spies.

REPORTS FROM THE NEWSPAPERS.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Enquirer writing from Harrisburgh, under date of Sept. 12, says:

Gen. WOOL has now fully entered upon his duties here. Brig.-Gen. REYNOLDS, of the Pennsylvania Reserves, at present commands the new forces. Col. CHARLES CAMPBELL will lead the advance.

There is no truth in the report of Sigel's shelling Frederick. The enemy have entirely deserted that place, moving towards Gettysburgh and Greencastle. What numbers have recrossed the Potomac at Williamsport is unknown. It is not a retreat.

The Mayor of Harrisburgh has issued a proclamation commanding every able-bodied man to remain in the city, unless ordered off, and entailing severe punishment upon any who may be arrested by the guards in the attempt to leave.

There is a very large force at Chambersburgh—regulars, cavalry, artillery and militia. The farmers throughout the valley are flocking in. The Harrisburgh militia, infantry, cavalry and artillery, are ordered off. Men are constantly pouring in from the north and west. Six thousand will be here from Pittsburgh. A number of special trains will start for Chambersburgh. The Pennsylvania Railroad carries all militia men free, singly or in companies.

A special dispatch to the same paper, dated at Washington, says that a prominent Secesh just returned from Frederick, where he has been in consultation with the leading spirits, says that the whole rebel army is going to Pennsylvania, and will march direct to Harrisburgh.

That they will cut off the Northern Central and Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroads, and move the army en masse, living upon the country through which it passes.

That, before reaching Harrisburgh, they will cut the Pennsylvania Railroad at a point near Newton Hamilton, and prevent assistance coming from the West.

They say they can keep a week ahead of Gen. McCLELLAN all the time, and conquer a peace by holding our cities as hostages, or if they cannot accomplish their object, then to march back into Virginia laden down with stores and supplies of all kinds.

FACTS FROM FREDERICK.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, writing from Gettysburgh, on Friday, the 12th, says:

"A number of Union refugees of property and social standing from Frederick City are now at this place, among whom are Col. Dunne, of the staff, and Home Brigade; Grayson Eichelberger, Dr. W. Brooks, Wm. H. Dunan, Dr. Jenks, A. Schaffner, John Stimmell, E. Gollenbach, M. Hershberger, D. Morgan, Geo. A. Abbott, J. H. Markey, J. M. Gooch, Hera Lawrence, Lewis Dill and D. Goldsborg. These gentlemen have been daily in communication with Frederick by means unknown to the rebel army, and have been well informed of all occurrences by a messenger nightly arriving here since the occupation of that place by the enemy on Saturday last.

"News arrived last evening that the evacuation of Frederick by the rebels commenced at three o'clock A. M. on Wednesday, and ended by nine o'clock P. M., with the exception of a rear guard, which left at three A. M. yesterday morning. Previous to the evacuation, which was stimulated by the reported advance of our army, the headquarters of Gen. LEE were at KEEFER THOMAS' house, three miles southeast of Frederick, on the Georgetown road. JACKSON's headquarters were ten miles east of Frederick, on the Baltimore pike, and a large portion of the force laid between these localities. The divisions of HILL, LONGSTREET, and LOVING were stretched along each bank of the Monocacy river, between Frederick and the Potomac. Two thousand of JACKSON's advance guard were encamped north of Frederick, between the forks of the road to Walkersville and the Gettysburgh turnpike. The great bulk of the Manassas army, numbering from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand men, were considered to be scattered in these various directions. A brother of my informant made a calculation, that 60,000 men, with their baggage wagons, entered Frederick yesterday, from the northeast and south, and filed through by the western road toward Middletown, from three in the morning till nine at night, perhaps 40,000 more having gone from Buckeystown to Petersville, and thence north to Middletown, without passing through Frederick. A portion of Jackson's cavalry took possession of Hagerstown yesterday morning, whose evident intention is to obtain supplies in that direction, particularly of flour from the mills of Waynesboro', inside of the Pennsylvania line, and grain from Greencastle, Pennsylvania, which is a depot for large railroad freightage of produce to Harrisburgh. The thirty four mills around Frederick have been despoiled of several thousand barrels of flour, and the farmers on the northern, eastern and southern side, where the rebels were encamped, have been well relieved of their forage, grain, and cattle, payment in all cases having been honorably made in Confederate scrip, to Union men as well as Secessionists, with the exception of Col. DUNNE, who, being a mustering and disbursing officer of our army, had his farm pillaged to the amount of $2,500, without the inestimable privilege of Confederate scrip compensation. He clearly suffered through the loss of horses. Guards were placed by LEE over all property, that none might be taken unless paid for.

THE DRAFT.

The wrath of the rebels was excited by the contemplated draft of our Government in Maryland, upon what they considered their own soil, and the only person arrested by them in Frederick was WILLIAM MANORY, Commissioner of the draft for Frederick County, whom they finally paroled to remain in the place a certain number of days, after destroying his enrollment list.

All the Union hospital furniture, including mattresses, blankets, sheets and medicines, was taken on the departure of the army, and 160 sick rebel soldiers were left behind, to be provided by our Government with necessaries.

An abundance of wagons were possessed by the rebels, but of heterogeneous descriptions, varying from one-horse to four-horse vehicles, of all shapes and sizes. It was noticed that but about one hundred United States army wagons were among them. From the quantity supposed to have been taken at different times, there is reason to suppose they would have had more.

REBEL RECRUITS.

The number of recruits obtained in Maryland is indefinite, but it was evidently far below the calculation of the rebels, and several hundred soldiers are said to have been lost by desertion. One gang of sixty men came from Emmettsburgh to enlist, but, seeing the condition of their contemplated comrades, were disenchanted, and continued to return. A few recruits have been obtained in Pennsylvania, among whom seven were from Millerstown, a few miles from this place.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

The rebel Generals expressed themselves as much disappointed at the strong Unionism found through Maryland, and at the apathy displayed by those who avowed themselves as sympathizers. The fighting Secessionists have long since joined their army. They can get supplies in Maryland, but they can get neither the state nor the people. Their visit has raised prices of provisions sensibly in Frederick, and at the present moment flour is at $16 a barrel there, coffee 50 cents, &c. Supplies, however, will soon arrive from Baltimore.

The haste of the rebels to leave Frederick was so great, that they left a number of cannon, also much ammunition and provisions. Early yesterday morning, twenty-five cavalry men from LONGSTREET's division returned and destroyed the pieces and type of the Examiner office, in revenge for its Union sentiments.

THE MOVEMENTS OF OUR ARMY.

The report here is that the advance guard of McCLELLAN's army commenced, at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, to shell the rebel camps from Bush Creek, along the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, five miles from Frederick. They doubtless soon found that the enemy had departed, and during the afternoon, more without question, is Frederick. Being relieved of this, the citizens of that place now rejoicing have process returning to their homes.

The best order had been kept in Frederick by the Provost Guard, and the stores had been cleared of all kinds of produce, and wagons and vehicles had been pressed into the service to remove off. One merchant had eight thousand dollars of Confederate scrip in his possession, which had been given him for goods sold. Rather at the rate of 10 per barrel. They paid for everything they took in the kind of money, and although some of them had United States Treasury notes, they would not part with them. They even refused to receive in change any of their own money, demanding Maryland notes. Of course the storekeepers dare not refuse. The farmers of the surrounding country had also suffered similarly in the seizure of their stock, and the sympathizers of Jeff. Davis have fared, in this respect, the same as the Union men.

Frederick County will long remember this visit of the "redeemers of My Maryland," who have descended upon her substance like a swarm of locusts. Washington County commences its suffering to-day.

The rebels are said to complain that their reception in Maryland is not so cordial as they anticipated, and have looked in vain for the insurrection they expected in Baltimore, and a rally of the faithful to their flag in Western Maryland. Those who have been sending prayers to Jeff. DAVIS to come to their rescue, have not, they say, rushed forward to welcome them.

FOUR DAYS' EXPERIENCE WITH THE REBELS IN FREDERICK.

We had yesterday a conversation with a gentleman who was in Frederick when BRADLEY JOHNSON and his rebel followers came into the city, and remained there four days, not leaving until Tuesday evening. We append the substance of the conversation:

Q.—What is the number of the rebels?

A.—It would be impossible to say. They are, however, in large force—I should suppose not less than 70,000 men, though they claim to be over 100,000. One of the most intelligent of them told me that nearly the whole force who fought FOPE are with them.

Q.—Do they interfere with the people?

A.—Not in the least. I mixed among them, after Gen. LEE's proclamation was issued, and spoke my sentiments very freely. They took it all in good part, and replied to me as they thought proper.

Q.—Was there any Federal money used by them in their purchases?

A.—None at all that I heard of. The only money besides Confederate scrip was some South Carolina money. They have perfectly cleaned everything out of the city in the way of clothing and provisions, and seemed to think if they remain a week longer both soldiers and people will be in a starving condition. They go around the town, also, begging something to eat, but always offer Confederate scrip in payment.

Q.—How did the storekeepers fare?

A.—They have sold everything, and been compelled to give money in change. They were ordered to open their stores by BRADLEY JOHNSON, and did not dare to refuse the money offered. Mr. A. J. DELAUNEY, one of the leading Secessionists, had a large stock of boots and shoes, and while dealing them out for rebel scrip, fairly got his back in a stiffness when some of his Union friends congratulated him on the business he was doing. Mr. D. was one of the Committee of citizens who went out to welcome the rebels to the city.

Q.—Has any of the houses of the Union citizens who absented themselves been invaded?

A.—The only house occupied by the rebels is that of Gen. CORSON, and it is not abused. A party of soldiers, incited by some of the Secession town people, broke into the Frederick Examiner office, and commenced to destroy the office furniture, when a secession lawyer named ROSS interfered, and the Provost-Guard coming up, soon dispersed the party. BRADLEY JOHNSON told them that any attempt to insure the outrages on private property would be punished by death.

Q.—Did they obtain many recruits in Frederick?

A.—Not many in Frederick, but about five hundred came in from Baltimore, Anne Arundel, Montgomery and Carroll Counties, and some from Baltimore City. After seeing the character of the army and the life which the rebel lead, many of them refused to join, and were getting home again. When leaving myself I met six young men from Carroll County, who pleaded them to WESTMINSTER. They acknowledged that they had been to Frederick to join the army, but after "scaling and smelling" it had concluded to return home. They begged me not to give their names.

Q.—What did they mean by smelling it?

A.—They meant exactly what they said. I have never seen a mass of such filthy, strong-smelling men. Three of them in a room would make it uninhabitable, and when marching in column along the street the smell from them was most offensive. There are some of the better class of men among them, but the great mass are men of lowest caste, and although under strict discipline, the filth that pervades them is most remarkable. Their sympathizers at Frederick have been greatly disappointed in the character of the army, and most of them are now as anxious for them to disappear as they were for them to come. Their coming to Frederick has been a sad visitation to the middling classes, many of whom have lost everything in exchange for rebel scrip, especially the storekeepers. They have no uniforms, but are all well armed and equipped, and have become so inured to hardships that they care but little for any of the comforts of civilization.

Q.—What was the general appearance of the rebel soldiers?

A.—They were the roughest looking set of creatures I ever saw—their features, hair and clothing matted with dirt and filth, and the scrutinizing they kept up gave warrant for remain in abundance. The secession ladies of Frederick used to call the troops of Gen. BANKS "nasty, dirty creatures," and the Unionists had adopted a species of signs to remind them of their old taunts. Whenever a Unionist met a Secessionist on the street, he would commence to scratch, which all understood.

Q.—What do you think of the purpose of the rebel army?

A.—They admit that their coming into Maryland was a question of starvation, or food. They were almost famished for food when they reached the Potomac, and say that for three days they had lived principally on green corn and apples.

Q.—But what is their purpose now?

A.—They are in full force, and undoubtedly proposed when they crossed the river to meet Gen. POPE and serve him as they did on the other side of the river, and capture Washington. But when they heard that Gen. McCLELLAN was before them in full command they became more cautious in their movements.

Q.—What is their opinion of Gen. McCLELLAN?

A.—They respect and fear him. In fact, they laugh at POPE and McDOWELL, and say that they advanced on them with the fullest confidence of defeating them and destroying their army. Had they found POPE in command on the Maryland side they think they would have been in Washington in a few days.

Q.—But what is their purpose now?

A.—Well, when I left Frederick on Tuesday evening it was under the conviction that they were about to leave, and I feared that they might desire to take me with them. I had mixed among them so much, and talked so freely, that I feared they would think I knew too much to be left behind. There was every indication that they had become alarmed at the systematic movements of Gen. McCLELLAN, and were looking well to secure a safe line of retreat back to Virginia. The starting of Gen. JACKSON with his immense division, estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 men of all arms, towards Hagerstown, was touched upon as the first indication of a backward movement. There were also evidences of trepidation among the troops, who began to think they were not on safe ground.

Q.—Do you think they had any expectation of reaching Baltimore?

A.—Not unless they had first succeeded in defeating McCLELLAN and capturing Washington. They would never leave the line of the Potomac so long as Gen. McCLELLAN was at hand to move in their rear.

Q.—Did the Secessionists of Frederick give them any demonstrations of welcome?

A.—The great mass of the better classes of the sympathizers in Frederick have kept entirely aloof from them, and regret their presence. Those of no property and but little sense gave them a noisy welcome, and some of them will go back to Virginia with them—not to join the army, but to avoid the draft. A Committee of secession citizens went out to welcome them, but most of them were soon ashamed of the course they had pursued. The secession storekeepers have lost their goods with others, and wear most dolorous countenances.

Q.—Did BRADLEY JOHNSON ride around town with the American flag tied to his spurs?

A.—I heard he did, but did not see it myself. I, however, frequently saw horsemen driving through the city with the American flag trailing in the dust after them. They took down all they could find, and thus dragged them after them to their camps.

Q.—Was their language violent?

A.—Yes, very violent against the Yankees. It was a common saying that they desired no better sport than to kill and quarter a Yankee. As others speaking to a secession lady in this strain, said he would "kill, cut up, and fry a Yankee with as much pleasure as he would a chicken." A little pet negro of the lady, called Topsy, who was listening to this ralliant speech with her eyes and mouth wide open, here put in the exclamation, "And, massa, would you eat him, too?"

Q.—Have they driven any cattle across the river?

A.—Yes, I cannot say positively. They have driven a great deal of cattle through the town, coming in from the west, yet in the direction of their camps, and some of them the horses. Of course, no one is permitted to go to their camps. I have heard, however, that they have driven large quantities of cattle across the Potomac.

Q.—Do you think they intend to remain at Hagerstown?

A.—I do not know. They intend to remain long enough to concentrate their army and wait for the army of Gen. McCLELLAN to come up to them, if they choose. The main force of Longstreet's army at Hagerstown is with the intention of remaining there to Pennsylvania, but if Gen. LEE is driven across the line of the Monocacy by Gen. McCLELLAN, he will march back into Virginia, by way of the ford at Williamsport. A heavy rain-storm which set in early this morning will season their return back across the river with difficulty.

Q.—Did the rebel quartermaster seem to be in good humor?

A.—Very generally speaking. They are pretty much hardened by campaigning, though many of them were suffering with diarrhoea on account of the corn they had been eating.

Q.—Did you meet many Baltimore sympathizers there?

A.—No, not many. I questioned them with regard to the Maryland troops, and they generally replied that there were but few of them left. They had left in so many hard fights that they were almost annihilated. There were some Maryland Regiments in the Confederate service still in the service, but they admitted that if Gen. McCLELLAN was out of the way they would soon be in Washington.

Q.—Were there any church services at Frederick on Sunday last?

A.—Yes, there were services in some of the churches, and some of the southern sympathizers of the Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. ROSS, offered prayers most devoutly for the success of the rebel Army, and for the President of the United States, all in authority.

Q.—What do you think of the rebel cavalry?

A.—They were quite numerous, but their horses presented a poor appearance. They were evidence of hard usage and scarcity of provender.

Q.—How many mounted Confederate were in Frederick?

A.—Gens. LEE, JACKSON and LONGSTREET were all there; Gens. A. P. HILL, and, I believe, Gen. HOOD. The Provost-Marshal gave me evidence to the effect that there had been a skirmish between the Provost-Marshal and some rebel cavalry, which had been driven out of Middletown, and some rebel cavalry, which had been driven out of Boonsboro'.

The army was in excellent condition, and was moving forward with enthusiasm, to meet the enemy.

THE BATTLE AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Repulse of the Rebel Gen. Loring with Great Slaughter.

The Rebels Terribly Cut Up While Attempting to Ford the Potomac.

Another Sanguinary Repulse from the Maryland Heights.

The Rebels Mowed Down by Miles's Batteries.

The Baltimore American of yesterday morning has the following:

"A gentleman who left Frederick Thursday afternoon states that when he left, there was considerable consternation among the rebels with regard to a report that had just reached town of a battle near Harper's Ferry.

Col. DIXON S. MILES, repulsed an attack by Gen. LORING, with great slaughter. The account was that LORING had crossed the Potomac at Williamsport, simultaneously with the crossing of JACKSON and LEE at Leesburgh. Instead of marching towards this town, he had taken the public road by the ferry in the direction of Harper's Ferry.

A short distance above Harper's Ferry he attempted to ford the river with a large body of cavalry and infantry. The report was that when the river was covered with troops, Col. MILES opened upon them with his batteries from Camp Hoke, from the works of the railroad, with grape and canister, and made the river actually to run with blood, when the attack was abandoned.

They had also previously made an attempt to dislodge the batteries on Maryland Heights, and were repulsed by means of batteries scattering them and strewing the field with dead.

That there was a fight at Harper's Ferry on Thursday afternoon was well known in Frederick, the cannonading was heard there for forty-five minutes.

The current rumor both among rebels and others in Frederick was to the effect that

VOLUNTEER SURGEONS AT BULL RUN

A Narrative, by One of the Number, of What They Saw and What They Did.

Late on Saturday night, Sept. 6, a telegram was received by His Honor the Mayor, from the Secretary of War, to the effect that there had been a very severe battle at Bull Run—that there were immense numbers of wounded on the battle-field, and that surgeons who could be spared from New-York would proof great service at the Surgeon-General at Washington.

Upon this information, Mayor GUNTHER at once [illegible] the gentlemen to whom he could address himself, at the Astor House on Sunday, at 4 o'clock P. M. The invitation of Dr. CHARLES D. GRAVES, His Honor's physician, was called to the Chair, and Dr. THOS. W. [illegible] Secretary. The purpose of the meeting having been stated, the gentlemen ready to go, gave their names to the Secretary.

The following gentlemen complied: [illegible] Doty, Parrish, W. H. Stokes, Wm. Detmold, Pease, Cornelius Lorillard, Prof. Bedford, Foster, [illegible] Hinsdale, Parker, [illegible] James Anderson, J. E. Marsh, [illegible] Halsted, Doughty, [illegible] Eliab Harris, Smith O. Shaw, [illegible] Peay, Smith, Little, [illegible] Bowman.

On motion of Dr. ISAAC E. TAYLOR, an Executive Committee was appointed, consisting of Drs. Buckingham, Graves, and HASKINS, for the purpose of selecting the portion of the New-York Delegation to the battle-field. The Mayor tendered himself for the duty, and was unanimously accepted by the Delegation.

The meeting then adjourned. The members were requested to meet at 6 o'clock at the Jersey City Ferry.

Twenty-six of the Delegates were there at the appointed time. The remainder sent word that they would leave in the first morning train.

Upon the arrival of the Delegation at Washington they were taken to WILLARD'S Hotel, rooms were provided, and they were made perfectly comfortable.

The Executive Committee then called upon the Surgeon-General, who stated that the number of wounded had been greatly exaggerated, but that there was still a large number that required attention; that he would put the Capitol at the disposition of the New-York Delegation, to be used as a hospital, provided they would agree to nurse it. This was reported to the Delegation, and they unanimously consented to accept the proposition. Beds were procured—all were busily at work, and in the course of a day the Rotunda and corridors were ready to contain nearly a thousand patients. Arrangements for supplying the needed nourishing food were made by the Medical Director, Dr. MOORE; in the center of the Rotunda was the restaurant, with the Association of the Delegation.

Never was more brought in the Surgeon-General said more surgical aid was needed upon the battle-field. On Thursday morning the delegation were told that only ten Surgeons could be taken, and in consequence all but ten were dismissed. These ten gentlemen were requested by the Medical Director to prepare for the journey; and being ready, seated themselves at 10 in the morning in the ambulances that were drawn up in front of Willard's, and there they remained until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. By this time the greater number began already to suspect that their services would not be required, and accordingly left for New-York. About 5 o'clock Dr. MOORE appeared, and stated that he could use the services of volunteers, and that they should go as speedily as possible. Nearly all of the delegation volunteered, and in half an hour had left Washington and were on their way over the Long Bridge. The bridge, however, was so blocked up by baggage wagons, ambulances, &c., that we were repeatedly ordered to stop. At length, after two weary hours, the various impediments were successfully overcome, and we drove forward about two miles to the encampment of the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who were in readiness to go on the morrow. But this regiment having just arrived after a twelve hours' march, were so fatigued that it was thought they could not advance, so we were ordered to encamp ourselves. All the wagons were drawn up in line, the horses fed, and a fire made. A package of cold meat and dry bread disposed of, and we were ready to retire, when a messenger arrived with dispatch from Dr. HASKINS to Dr. MOORE, ordering us to proceed at once to Bull Run. So all were aroused, horses put in, and in fifteen minutes the train was again on its way. Four or five miles from this point at Bailey's Cross Roads we found, with Col. KILPATRICK'S Regiment, who expressed our assistance, as one of his men is suffering from a severe wound in the shoulder, was supposed to have injured the femoral artery. One of the surgeons remained behind with him, and I was left in charge of the rest of the train now in readiness. At Fairfax Court-house, which is a village consisting of two or three houses, we saw but few inhabitants, and those seemed to look upon us with aversion. Here we met a small squad of cavalry, and then passed in front of Gen. PLEASONTON'S Headquarters, where the detachment of Cavalry who accompanied us relieved their arms, and we were then permitted to proceed. Crossing Cub Run, five miles beyond Centreville, we passed through the all-nether-to-us-unknown town of Wea of the Ohio batteries, and at Fairfax we found Gen. CUSTER, who we found busily engaged with his staff, attending to the wants of about [illegible] men. We were then introduced, divided into squads and sent off in different directions. Dr. GUNNING, with two assistants, was dispatched to Centreville, about three miles further south. He says that in his course he was obliged to cross the battle-field where so many of our brave fellows fell—but he could not have been more horrible.

Night had fallen; lay in every direction groaning men, some with their legs torn off, others with their arms, others with a ball through their chest; there cold, and some were stretching fast the earth; some resting on a tree, against a friendly tree; here a heap of four or five, pile upon the other; there a row stretch out by side and fallen upon the very line on which they had advanced to battle array. Further on again, a row of five, and so number eighty, their bodies turned to the cold firmament, one resting his pallid cheek upon his brother's bleeding breast, he firmly commencing his last sleep, and the skirmishers, who had been hurried to Centreville, lay there scattered to thick, on every side, that one could hardly take a step without stumbling over a corpse.

Arriving at the house of Mr. CAINS, the Doctor found Dr. MCMILLAN in charge, and he took over to him the supplies, and then looked through the Hospital. Many of the wounded were shot through the hips and lower extremities; some in the shoulder and arms; one had been struck upon the brass buckle of his cap, which had been driven in upon the brain, and was removed by the Surgeon soon after he was brought in. The next morning, Dr. HOWARD, of the Army, arrived with ten ambulances, and Dr. GUNNING was detailed to bring in some wounded who were said to be about half a mile to the fight; he went, but found only some wounded Confederates, who were very polite and civil, offering gratefully a little water, which was given to the sufferer. Returning to Crome's house, all the wounded were placed in ambulances, and started for Dr. CONTRAN'S camp. After the patients and doctors had each one a bowl of soup and piece of bread, and then left for Washington with five hundred and sixty. On account of the wounded but slow progress was made. At Cub Run bridge we were overturned by our cavalry, and while we were waiting, the doctor in charge of the temporary Union Hospital there, sent us out a pail of tea—water, which was an agreeable change from the mud we had been drinking before. After reaching Fairfax Court-House the train was stopped, and each man given a bowl of soup, some sponge, and piece of bread. After completing the meal, we then again moved on with but few interruptions, until we came to the Green Roots, where we were obliged to wait two hours while some Pennsylvania regiment and their artillery went by. This time was occupied by many of the Doctors in sleeping, wrapped up in their blankets, by the side of the road. We reached Washington at 4 in the morning of Sunday. As there were no rooms to be had there, some were could found a sofa, and soon forgot hunger, fatigue and everything in sleep. Most of the gentlemen left Washington on Sunday afternoon; a few stay over until the Monday morning train.

Of the Corps in Sunday's engagement with two brigades of the Confederate officers, one from Mississippi, the other from Alabama, and the other from Georgia. They were all gentlemanly men, very [illegible] and pretty freely with him, on most topics. Only for one week; shoes, the [illegible] and [illegible] bare from one to six weeks. It was an excellent opportunity for Christians that they were fighting for their rights, and that the North had acted unjustly towards them. The Rebels had no right to secede, but we would endeavor to prevent it at all hazards. The prisoners, the privates were suffering much, they certainly being in very poor condition; many of the men had been [illegible] enough, because their feet were perfectly bare. All the dead Union soldiers I saw had shoes and pants. If they were ill to wear the pantaloons of those fellows that I saw, they would be of lower quality. The country through which we passed after leaving Fairfax Court House was completely desolated; half-burned houses, barns, fences torn down and burned, crops trampled in the earth, and the whole country in fact in the march of the army had reached an object lesson of the rebel, a scene of desolation. As we followed along the road, we picked up several knapsacks and left, apparently in the scrimmage; occasionally a dead horse, fragments of human clothing, straw, broken bottles showed the [illegible]

[illegible] Corps as the body which had [illegible] the brunt of the battle. Gen. [illegible] was spoken of by the wounded men with the [illegible] for the [illegible] Gen. [illegible] Corps, who were [illegible] what [illegible] hold [illegible] as to truth, I believe [illegible] Infantry [illegible] Sigel's division would run out with an air of simple curiosity, to see the long train as it passed; altogether, it was a scene of utter, irremediable ruin. Years must pass, with the most favorable circumstances, before that country can be brought back to the condition in which it was two years since.

AFFAIRS AT ALEXANDRIA.

From our Special Correspondent.

ALEXANDRIA, Friday, Sept. 5, 1862.

DESCRIPTION OF ALEXANDRIA.

I came here last evening, on board the beautiful Ariel—an old Fortress Monroe acquaintance—when my friend, the kind and gentlemanly Capt. JOHN DALY.

Although so much nearer to the eventful battle-fields of the past week, I am surprised to find far less excitement here than in Washington, although an amount of movement that would scarcely be surpassed by the most crowded parts of Broadway. The countless number of troops constantly going and coming—some limping weary sixteen-footed from the battle-field; others freshly arriving from the teeming North to man our fortifications—the endless trains of ambulances and wagons—cavalry dashing about in every direction,—all present the most animated appearance. Retail dealers of every kind are doing a flourishing business, and as one wanders among the dilapidated and ill-paved streets, and hears laughter and merriment at every corner, he could almost fancy himself in some old French town during Carnival time.

SPIRIT OF OUR TROOPS.

Strange to say, this elasticity of spirit is far more noticeable among those who have been doing the fighting, than among civilians. A braver set of fellows never existed than those composing our armies. I have yet to talk to the first man—whether officer or private—who is at all downhearted. Many grumble (and have they not good reason?) at the miserable manner in which our troops have been maneuvered, but they are flushed with hopes of retrieving all past disaster, and as certain of putting down the rebels as if a blow had not yet been struck.

INDIVIDUAL HEROISM.

Where so many are acquitting themselves nobly, it is impossible to record every individual act of bravery; but now and then cases will come to one's personal knowledge, and it is only fair to give all such cases publicly. Among those who did honor to themselves in the recent engagements, I know of none that have a more noble record than the Fourteenth United States Infantry, of PORTER'S Corps. This regiment went into action with 600 men, and came out with only 200. Capt. D. H. MCKENZIE, of this regiment, received one ball through his ear, and coming out at the back of his head—two through his hat; another spent ball struck him on the thigh, and his horse was pierced in three places. While streaming with blood, and almost unconscious from the wound in his head, Capt. H. K. TAYLOR, of his regiment, rode up and begged to take command. "No," said the gallant MCKENZIE, "I can stand it a little longer; you take command when I fall." He did stand it; remained with his men through the whole desperate engagement of Saturday, and is now in Washington suffering from the effect of his wounds.

Another Captain of the same regiment—J. M. LOOMIS, of Cincinnati—exhibited no less bravery. A spent ball struck his right arm, a shell splinter struck the back of his neck, and a bullet pierced his clothing near the thigh,—but he escaped unhurt, cheering on his men to the last.

Capt. H. K. TAYLOR, also of Cincinnati, very fortunately escaped, with nothing but a rude, but honorable, disfigurement of his left shoulder-strap. But Capt. O'CONNELL, of the same regiment, had the most miraculous escape of all. He received two wounds in his thigh, two bullet-holes through his clothing, and his horse killed under him, and yet he is doing well!

The Fifth New-York, also of PORTER'S Corps, left 90 dead on the field. Allowing the usual ratio of four wounded to one killed, this fine regiment must have had between 300 and 400 wounded out of 500 men! While we can raise scales by the million, and of such stuff as this, we have little to fear.

ENTHUSIASM ABOUT M'CLELLAN.

Whether Gen. MCCLELLAN is the right man or not there can be no mistaking that he is the present favorite of the army, and that his superseding POPE is hailed with the wildest acclamation of delight. This certainly was not the state of things immediately following the evacuation of the Peninsula. Gen. MCCLELLAN'S name was then handled about in a manner painful for his friends to hear. Whether this wonderful change is owing to the proverbial fickleness of republics, or to the necessity of using his name as a political watchword, or to any new lights which have compelled the army to return to their first love, will be a curious thing for history to determine. Of one thing, however, you may be quite sure; no other name but MCCLELLAN'S can, just now, solidarize our forces, and keep alive the enthusiasm of our army.

THEATRICALS IN ALEXANDRIA.

I was induced to visit the only place of amusement here, in company with some of our heroes, in search of relaxation. It was a sort of half concert, half theatre, held at Liberty Hall. The first thing that surprised me was a huge placard on each side of the stage, saying: "The audience will please not applaud—wounded soldiers below." This was the first intimation I had that this revelry was held over a hospital. The audience paid little attention to the admonition, and the poor fellows below must have wished them in perdition. The patriotic songs called forth bursts of applause at the mention of the names of MCCLELLAN, MCDOWELL, the Cumberland, WORDEN, ERICSSON, &c.

THE LIQUOR LAW

is being most rigidly enforced, both here and in Washington. In the latter place beer is still sold, but here even that beverage is withheld with a severity I never saw before.

STONEWALL JACKSON

has the credit of having played us a smart trick in the capture of those 100 wagons. He telegraphed in our authorities—under POPE'S signature—for just that number of wagons with provisions, and, as soon as they arrived, bagged them, and then telegraphed to Richmond to send on men, as he had plenty to feed them with. JACKSON was evidently intended for a Yankee, however much he may hate them.

THE WOUNDED

continue arriving here from the battle-field. The Long Branch has just left us with 350, and the Ariel is fast loading with another cargo to take to Washington. These soldiers, with many of whom I have just been conversing, all share in the same unbounded confidence in Gen. MCCLELLAN, pour the same imprecations upon the head of MCDOWELL, and give the rebels credit for having treated them mercifully when wounded; in spite of their having taken the clothes of our dead, which they say was done simply because they sorely wanted clothing, but not from any wanton or cruel feeling of spoliation. NEMO.

Sunday Last in Baltimore.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, Sept. 7, 1862.

There has been but little attention to Sabbath duties in this city to-day, though it has been a day of that quiet loveliness which invites to worship. The actual presence of Confederate troops on Maryland soil is a fact too nearly concerning Baltimore for her citizens to give heed to much else at present. The rebels are secretly exultant, but still avoid any other demonstration that will call attention to them. They venture forth as little as possible, turn from crowds with the instinct of self-preservation quickened by the treatment some of them have received at the hands of disorderly Unionists. Their joy at the apparent approach of their "day of deliverance" is not without its alloy, for a report is current among them that the advance of Stonewall JACKSON toward Baltimore shall be the signal of another St. Bartholomew massacre, of which Secessionists are to be the victims. In spite of their disarmament at one time by the Government, weapons are still common enough among them to make any disturbance a serious one for both sides.

The nervousness of the Secessionists no doubt magnifies the danger, but it is still evident that there are embers of discord here which may readily be fanned into a conflagration that would severely tax the efforts of the authorities for its control. Every precaution is being taken [illegible] the Union [illegible] physical system is [illegible] any disturbance [illegible] probably, for their [illegible] prompt violence. [illegible] yesterday, all those who had any fight in them have gone away and left nothing but non-combatants behind. The fear of a draft has of late sent many young men into Dixie, as some of the stable-keepers know to their cost, incurring the loss of their setters. Bohemia tired to lines absconding rebels, just for a short time into the country. The Upper Potomac has been the favorite crossing-place since our gunboats have been cruising about as much below Washington.

The city is full of rumors to-night, none of which are worth transmitting, except such as you will get in the regular course of telegraphing. It is strange how Baltimoreans cling to the idea that their city is to be bombarded some day by our vessels without a moment's notice. Many old ladies scarcely sleep of nights for fear that their rest may be disturbed before morning by the National bombs crashing among their jam-pots and pickle-jars. I still hear of people in all directions gathering together their papers, and putting their houses in order for any emergency. This is wise, for, as I have indicated, there are elements of disturbance in the city itself that may break forth at any time.

It is scarcely believed, even among Secessionists, that the rebels have any present designs on Baltimore, though they profess great confidence in their ability to take it without much trouble. Any of the forts, it is declared, can be forced to yield within five hours, and their possession would make the harbor untenable to anything but iron-clads.

Pennsylvania is more generally stated to be the object of Confederate ambition, and Philadelphia the particular subject of their intentions. A raid into the Northern States they are foolish enough to believe here will speedily terminate the war by revealing to the North the folly of attempting to subjugate a people who, after such efforts to destroy them, are still strong enough to take carry the war into Africa.

FIERREPONT.

An Appeal to the Public in Behalf of the Prison Association of New-York.

The undersigned has accepted the position of Corresponding Secretary of the Prison Association of New-York. This society was formed in December, 1844, under the auspices of such men as REV. F. WAYLAND, JOHN DUER, THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN, JAMES BELLOCK, GABRIEL SHAW, and other no less eminent and worthy citizens. Whatever had been done before for the reclamation and care of persons amenable to the penalty of the law, was the work of benevolent individuals, acting with reference to particular cases. There was no systematic, organized method of reaching the discharged convict with elevating and remedial influences. But, previous to that time, the attention of benevolent and thoughtful persons had been directed to this subject. It had become a problem how, on the one hand, to screen the innocent and the unfortunate, arrested through mistake or malice, from undeserved punishment; and how, on the other, to save the released prisoner from relapsing into crime? This problem was the providential occasion of the Prison Association. The formation of this society was the solution of both the difficulties involved in the problem.

The one great and paramount object of the Association is the prevention of crime. This object it seeks to accomplish—first, by a humane attention to persons arrested and detained for examination or trial; secondly, by the improvement of prison discipline; and thirdly, by the encouragement and assistance it extends to discharged convicts in their efforts to reform and gain an honest livelihood.

From a careful examination of its annual reports, I am profoundly impressed with the great usefulness of the Association as an agency for the prevention of crime and the reformation of criminals. With resources wholly inadequate to such a prosecution of its work, as the best and highest interests of the community demand, it has, nevertheless, with the slender means accorded to it during the seventeen years of its existence, achieved the following results:

Fifty thousand seven hundred and fifty persons detained, either as witnesses or for examination or trial,—2,095 per annum—have been visited in prison and suitably counseled.

Five thousand two hundred and sixty-two detained prisoners,—309 annually—either innocent or very young, or manifestly penitent, have received to aim by the means used on the recommendation of the Association; and the children restored to their disconsolate and anxious parents or friends.

Seventeen thousand six hundred and five complaints,—1,035 yearly—have been carefully examined.

Four thousand four hundred and fifty-three complaints,—a yearly average of 263—have been, at the instance of the Association, discontinued as either frivolous or the result of passion or prejudice.

Six thousand nine hundred and seventy-three discharged convicts,—an annual average of 410—have been aided with money or clothing.

Two thousand five hundred and seventy-eight discharged convicts,—151 per annum—have been provided with situations where they could earn, and where most of them are actually earning an honest living. Less than five per cent. of these have ever been recommitted to prison, and more than three-fourths have been reclaimed and restored to a career of virtuous and useful industry.

Seventy-one searching inspections of prisons—State and County—have been made, by which a great mass of valuable information has been collected, the condition and workings of our penal institutions clearly shown, and their government and discipline materially improved.

The United States jurisprudence of the State is not a little indebted to this organization. A Committee of the Association, of which BENJAMIN F. BUTLER and JOHN DUER were members, drew the elaborate, comprehensive and most admirable bill which the Legislature of 1847 enacted into a law, creating and fixing the present prison system of New-York.

In addition to all this, the Association has carried on an extended correspondence with the most eminent philanthropists and penologists of this and other countries, and has published eighteen Annual Reports, embodying, besides a connected history of its own doings, numerous letters, speeches and essays, of unsurpassed ability and of the highest authority, on all the great questions connected with prison discipline, prison reform, and the administration of penal justice.

All these important results have been accomplished on an aggregate of receipts, amounting, in seventeen years, to $41,947 39; being an annual average of only $2,426 31.

It was stated in the second Annual Report that, to carry out the plans of the Society effectively, a yearly income would be needed of $8,000 to $10,000. Our necessities are not less, but rather greater now than they were then; and the highest of the sums named could be advantageously expended on the objects which claim our attention. The contributions received in past years have been quite inadequate to the wants of the Association. It has been compelled, not only to often dole out its charities in the most grudging and niggardly proportions, but to deny all relief to many worthy applicants, thus subjecting them, in the weakness of renewed temptation, and a probable relapse into crime. As a measure of public economy, the wealthier part of our citizens, who have the bulk of the taxes to pay, cannot lay out money to better advantage than in aiding our Society in its work. While the institution, thus far, has cost the community but a fraction over $41,000, there is no doubt that it has saved it hundreds of thousands in a diminished expenditure for the Administration of Criminal Justice on the one hand; and on the other, in the accumulations of an industry, which would otherwise, at least a considerable part of it, have been, but a negative quantity. So obvious and decided is this tendency of one department of our labors, that Massachusetts—and this action on her part is the combined result of our example, and the experience of her own Prison Discipline Society—has an agent, with an office in Boston, whose duty it is made by law "to counsel such discharged convicts as may seek his aid, and to take such measures to procure employment for such of them as may desire it, by corresponding with persons in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, and with benevolent individuals and associations, as he may deem proper and expedient." This agent declares that he "has never failed to find, for every one who asked it, employment at the work he wished and in the part of the country he wished, at a dollar to a dollar and three-quarters a day." The result of this wise and merciful legislation is, that "most of the convicts, when discharged, are enabled to resist the temptations to idleness and crime, and become industrious men and good citizens." Regarded, then, in a merely economical point of view, our association is a great social benefit, since it costs far less to prevent crime than to punish it. The surest and cheapest protection to society against the evil is to make them good, to convert felons into upright and useful citizens; which reformation, by the blessing of God on suitable efforts, can be effected, as experience has shown, in a much larger proportion of cases than is commonly supposed possible.

The field of the Society's operations,—in one department of its work directly, and in all through auxiliaries, if such, as is hoped, shall be formed,—is the entire State. It respectfully, but earnestly asks from the philanthropic citizens of the State, but particularly of the metropolis, the means to extend its work fully and effectively, in all the departments of benevolent effort which that work embraces. The amount required is small, when compared with the objects contemplated, and especially when it is considered that many times the sum needed would certainly be saved to the community through the labors of the Association.

The undersigned, under the instructions of the Executive Committee, will, as he has opportunity, call personally upon the friends of the Association, and [illegible] their co-[illegible] to the [illegible] Street, to [illegible] Jr., treasurer, [illegible]

E. C. WINES, Corresponding Secretary New-York Prison Association.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Sept. 8, 1862.

THE INDIAN WAR.

Terrible Battle with the Indians—Two Towns Burned.

St. Paul papers, of the 8th instant, bring news of a terrible battle with the Indians, on Tuesday of last week, near the Lower Agency, between Capt. GRANT'S company of Infantry, Capt. ANDERSON'S cavalry, and a detail of soldiers and citizens—in all about 150 men—who had been sent out by Col. SIBLEY to bury the dead. The Indians nearly surprised the camp early on Tuesday morning. Some of the soldiers were shot while yet in their tents.

The battle continued all that day, and on the morning of the next, till reinforcements under Col. SIBLEY came up.

Thirteen were killed, and buried on the battle-field and forty-four in all wounded out of the force of 150 men. Some ninety horses were also killed, nearly all at the first fire, which proved very fortunate, as they made them into breastworks. They could form no idea of the number of Indians killed, as they were off in the tall grass, and their bodies were immediately carried away by their companions.

Most of the thirteen killed were from St. Paul.

Abercrombie was surrounded by Indians. The towns of Forest City and Hutchinson were burned by the savages. Indians were appearing in numbers on the Minnesota, Crow and Red rivers.

The following is the account of the battle:

Capt. GRANT, with a company of infantry, and Capt. ANDERSON, with seventy-five cavalry, were sent on to clear the way toward Yellow Medicine and bury the dead, on Sunday morning, August 31. They encamped that night opposite the Lower Agency, on this side of the river. In the morning (Monday) Capt. ANDERSON, with his cavalry and a few infantry, forded and swam the river to the Agency, and buried the dead there, while Capt. GRANT, remaining Capt. GRANT'S division buried a large number on their side—mostly soldiers from Capt. MARSH'S company—together they interred eighty-five, a greater part of whom were horribly mutilated. Near the mouth of Beaver River Capt. GRANT picked up a woman who had been on the prairie for two weeks. She was in such a state of exhaustion and fright that I have yet been unable to gain any items of information from her.

Major BROWN penetrated as far as the fork of the roads to Yellow Medicine and Cotsaupprairie, to ascertain, if possible, which way the Indians had taken. He saw no indications of their having been there for four or five days.

The cavalry recrossed to Capt. GRANT'S Division, and they encamped for the night on Birch-Coolie, opposite the Agency, and three miles from it. Next morning, (Tuesday,) at the early break of day, as the guards were being changed, the sentries saw some objects moving over the prairies toward them; they at first supposed them cattle, but fired into them. A volley was instantly returned, killing some of the guard, and wounding a number more.

Within ten minutes the whole encampment was surrounded with over two hundred and fifty savages, pouring from all sides a galling fire into the very midst of our troops. If they had then made a charge the whole camp would have been cut to pieces. Their fire was briskly returned from our men, who had to fight lying flat in the grass and among the wagons. At 10 o'clock they commenced throwing up intrenchments, working as they lay, for it was impossible for a man to raise his head without at once having a number of shots fired at him. The works were, however, pushed on, and by 2 P. M. they had their lines intrenched with earthworks and the dead horses, which they rolled together in line as much as possible.

Early in the morning our guard at Fort Ridgeley heard the firing, and Maj. R. N. MCLEAN, with three companies of infantry, and Col. MCPHAIL with about fifty cavalry, were sent in the direction from which it was heard. They advanced to within three miles of Capt. GRANT'S encampment on the opposite side of the river. Here they were nearly surrounded by Indians, who endeavored to hem them in and cut them off from water, intending, doubtless, to make a charge next morning at daybreak. They were, however, held at a distance by our shell with which we kept scouring the ravine and woods.

A messenger returned to us at the fort about 4 P. M., reporting the state of affairs, and as soon as the lines could be formed, Col. STEAM with his whole command left for their relief. The Seventh Regiment had but just joined us, and the men were weary, foot-sore and hungry, but they received the tidings of a brush with the savages with a shout, and eagerly pushed on with as without waiting for food or rest. We marched till 2 next morning (Wednesday) when we joined Maj. MCLEAN'S Division. Having rested on our arms a couple of hours, we again pushed on at break of dry. The number of Indians around continually increased, and by the time we were opposite Capt. GRANT'S encampment, the skirt of the woods and the ravine were teeming with them, making the morning hideous with their yells. A few shot and shell from our howitzers and cannon made them retreat beyond range of their guns to the summit of the bluff beyond the creek, when they stood and dared us on, waving their blankets, brandishing their swords, and beckoning us to come on. We formed in line of battle, and pushed on to the encampment—the savages, in the meantime, keeping good the distance between us, and got in to them nearly exhausted from the want of food and rest. The tents were completely riddled with balls.

Appeal from Northwestern Iowa.

A gentleman writing from Spirit Lake on Sept. 3d, makes the following appeal, through the Dubuque Times:

We of the extreme northern frontier of the State still stand our ground, though not without some apprehensions for the future. The flourishing settlement known as Belmont, about eighteen miles northeast of this place, on the Des Moines River, is utterly abandoned; those who were not killed have gone east, not to return. They leave improved claims, their crops, hay, &c., not stopping even to find all their stock, of which they had large quantities.

Another settlement, Springfield, next below the last named place, where no people were killed, is for the present abandoned.

At other points along the frontier the people have assembled at some place which seemed most defensible, and there keep guard. Here we are putting up pickets about our Court-house, which is of brick, and situated upon elevated ground. From the top of the Court-house the country can be seen for from three to five miles around. We have here at present from forty to fifty soldiers, under a capable and energetic officer, Lieut. SAWYER, whose plan is, after erecting the pickets, to keep his command on constant duty as scouts, and to give such warning in case of danger as will enable the people to reach the Court-house before the Indians can make an attack.

But how long can we endure this constant state of alarm before we, too, shall conclude to leave? The answer to this question depends upon the policy now adopted by the Government toward the Sioux nation.

They must be exterminated or driven so far as to leave no room for apprehension that they will return. The Sioux are almost as bad as the rebels, and their allies, and must be dealt with in the same manner. The rose-water policy is not less out of place here than on the Potomac. It has cost already the lives of hundreds of defenceless women and children. The Sioux must be followed up, hunted out, destroyed, or driven to the far North or West, where their return will become impossible. The only alternative is the extermination of one-sixth part of the Union of the State, by their avowedly vengeful foes. Every year since the massacre here in '57, they have been committing depredations along this frontier. The Government, laboring under the mistaken idea that those depredations were only the work of a few predatory Indians, outcasts, with whom the Sioux nation had no sympathy—acted probably in this matter by Indian agents and Indian interpreters—has heretofore acted solely upon the defensive. In accordance with this policy, the Government has sent a few troops here, or along the line of settlement from this place to Sioux City. Are not recent events sufficient to undeceive the Government and lead to the adoption of a new policy? To this earnest inquiry, with the greatest solicitude, we want an answer. Upon this answer depends the abandonment of the country, and with it the ruin of hundreds of families who have expended all their means in making themselves, as they supposed, permanent homes.

Incidents of the Minnesota Indian War.

A. J. BOLLY writes from St. Peter, under date of the 31st ult., the following facts to the St. Paul Press. He says:

"This afternoon I spent a short time in the hospital, and if any have in idea that these matters are not really as bad as represented, a few sights such as I saw would convince them fully. Everything that could be is being done to relieve the sufferings of the wounded, and Drs. DARRAT, WILLIAMSON, BARNES, WHITLAW and others, have rendered all the assistance that medical skill was capable of; yet, despite all this, some scenes as the following are enough to sicken a heart of stone. EDWARD PAYNER and family, in New-Ulm, on Tuesday, being driven out of the house, were flying to their neighbors for protection, when a boy of 7 years was shot dead, and another had three frightful gashes by a tomahawk on his head, one of which had cleft the skull open. He lay without food for two days, and was found by his father on the third and brought to the hospital. Mrs. PAYNER was alive in the brush. Mrs. HAUSMANN was running for her life, when a musket ball pierced the hand of an infant she was carrying, frightfully mangling it, and passed into her back. The savages tomahawked one woman and separated her feet with a stick, and so dragged her over the grass till she died. Others they have nailed to fences and pierced to death; some they have disemboweled, and, cutting off their hands and feet inserted them in place. In one house in New Ulm, a woman and four children were burned to death. A woman and five children came into the fort last Saturday morning, having subsisted on the prairies for [illegible] would die. Mr. BASS, [illegible] his two sons to bring [illegible] out one in the buggy, [illegible] Mr. HAUSMANN and [illegible] dead them, took out the [illegible] the buggy, starting, Mr. BASS and then went on pulling the buggy by hand, but the Indians fired upon them and severely wounded Mr. BASS. They then left the buggy [illegible] cannot say—that the Indians then took Mrs. HAUSMANN and child, and burned them to death. CHARLES BASS, who has been a captive among the Indians, [illegible] that there are about 150 captives in their hands. It is feared by some that part of these have already been massacred and that the rest will soon share the same fate."

FROM KENTUCKY.

The Oath Administered to All Solemnizing Marriage—Abuse of the Pass System—Cowardly Applicants for Exemption—Gilbert's Marching Order—The Press Urge an Immediate Advance upon the Vagabonds.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1862.

I overlooked the fact that the General Assembly enacted, and the Governor approved the following: That no person shall solemnize marriage until, in addition to the present requirements of law, he shall file in the office of the County Court of the County in his residence, a written affidavit, subscribed by him and sworn to before some person legally authorized to administer an oath of the following purport and effect, viz.: I do solemnly swear or affirm that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of this State, and be faithful and true to the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the laws and government thereof, so long as I continue a citizen thereof; and I do further solemnly swear or affirm that I will not aid, assist, abet or comfort, directly or indirectly, the so-called Confederate States, or those now in rebellion against the United States or the State of Kentucky, so long as I continue a citizen of the state, so help me God. That any person who shall solemnize marriage without first complying with the foregoing, shall be subject to a fine for every such of fence, of $50 to $500.

The pass system is abused by rebel sympathizers and quasi Unionists. It has hitherto practically amounted to nothing, so far as designed to stop underground intercourse with the enemy. With or without passes, spies are constantly plying their vocation and many young men of the county, and some of the city, have gone off mounted, to join MORGAN. It is suggested that the commanding General obtain the services of reliable Unionists from the counties where the invaders and insurgents are, from whom those applying for passes shall get certificates of their Unionism, before the passes are granted; and, if they fail to get such indorsement, shall be kept here and put at such labor as the disloyal can be trusted to perform.

It is stated that many have applied for exemptions from military duty on account of alienage, through long residence, large property holders, and exercising all the rights and enjoying all the franchises of citizens of Kentucky. It is suggested that the names of all applicants for exemption under the plea of alienage (and, I might add, under any other plea) be published for public scrutiny. H. PRADT ANDERSON, attache to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, advertises here that, "British subjects, who have not completed the act of naturalization, are still entitled to the rights and immunities of British subjects, unless they have forfeited their claim to Her Majesty's protection by improperly voting at elections, or in any other way unduly exercising the exclusive privilege of citizens, in which case, having enjoyed the benefit of citizenship, they have rendered themselves liable to its obligations."

Forty-one certificates of exemptions for alienage were issued yesterday.

Gen. JOHN W. GRAY (acting Brigadier-General Kentucky State Guard for this city and county) orders, to-day, that all able-bodied citizens, between 18 and 45, who fail to voluntarily enroll before 5 P. M. to-morrow, will be enrolled and placed on such duty as disloyal men can be intrusted to perform.

Maj.-Gen. GILBERT orders that all portions of the United States Army in Kentucky will habitually have on hand at least two days' rations.

Nineteen steamboat arrivals and eighteen departures yesterday. Four gunboats will soon ply between here and the mouth of the Wabash.

The Press, for many obvious and important reasons, urge Gens. WRIGHT, GRANGER, WALLACE and BURNS to move upon the invaders and resident insurgents, and expel, capture, or exterminate them as soon as possible. But they want no more Richmond routs and Lexington and Frankfort skedaddles. Only jackanapes and nincompoops assert that "our men can go as a mob, and utterly demolish all the rebels in Kentucky." Mere numbers, without generalship and discipline, are worse than useless to our successful advance. PONTIAC.

LOUISVILLE, Wednesday, Sept. 10, 1862.

It is rumored that the enemy occupy Lebanon, Lagrange, and Hobbs' Station, on the Louisville and Frankfort Railroad, twelve miles from the city. I shouldn't wonder—there's nothing to prevent them. Carrollton and Warsaw are threatened. Gen. BURNS declares he will burn both towns to the ground, if they become rendezvous for guerillas to waylay or molest Government or other steamers. "The Provisional Government of Kentucky" is under way at Frankfort. His Provisional Excellency, RICHARD HAWES, (ex M. C. from the Lexington District, from '37 to '41,) has issued a proclamation for a meeting, on the 15th, of the Provisional Council, in the State-house. The rebel flag floats defiantly from the dome of the Capitol. Residents of Frankfort, hitherto reported "first-rate Union men," do honor to KIRBY SMITH and JOHN MORGAN, and the Louisiana Tigers and extend to them the fullest measure of Kentucky hospitality. How long shall this last? Shall the invaders gain a permanent lodgment in the heart of the State? What are Gens. WRIGHT and BURNS about?

Case of Col. Felix Comfort, of the "Enfans Perdus"—now Imprisoned at Fortress Monroe.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As we are now at a crisis when everything should be done to animate and nothing to dampen the zeal and courage of our troops,—especially those of foreign birth,—allow me to call public attention to one of the most flagrant cases of apparent injustice which has yet come to my knowledge during the progress of this war.

There is now in prison, at Fortress Monroe, a gallant soldier—Col. FELIX CONROSE—of the fine regiment known as the "Enfans Perdus," and under most peculiar circumstances, which I will endeavor to make clear to you. This brave Frenchman—(unfortunately, for himself, unable to speak one word of English)—beloved by all his companions in arms, is an old hero, and showed me decorations of honor for actual service in the field, of which any soldier might be justly proud. He is a chevalier of the "Legion d'Honneur," has a Crimean medallion, and also a French national medal of the first class. He served fourteen years in Africa, under LAMORICIERE and BOUGUEY, fought nobly through the whole Crimean campaign, and came to this country with the highest introductions from his own.

In response to the call of his adopted country, Col. CONROSE determined to take up arms in her defense. Collecting together all the gallant and daring Frenchmen he could find—most of them his own personal friends, who would brave death with him, and some of them old comrades in arms from Europe—he, at much difficulty and great sacrifices, succeeded, after seven months' hard labor, in forming the splendid regiment called the Enfans Perdus, paying freely, from his own pocket, for supporting the families of many of his soldiers; and, I believe, the regiment was formed under the auspices of Gen. MCCLELLAN himself.

Col. CONROSE had no sooner achieved his purpose and had his regiment moved down to Yorktown for duty, before intriguers took advantage of his temporary absence in New York, upon some important military business, to undermine and force him from his nearly and honorably earned position—one of those tricks unfortunately too frequent in our armies. A certain individual—one of the last who joined the regiment—at once commenced a plot by which he should become Captain, and was joined by two others—men wielding the necessary authority—one of whom wished to be Colonel, and the other Lieutenant-Colonel, of the regiment. I withhold the names of these parties at present, although fully in my possession.

The original schemer—the same, by the way, who is reported to have succeeded by his machinations in destroying the Emerald Zouaves

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

OUR HARBOR DEFENCES.

SIDE-WHEEL BARBETTES.

Mr. CHARLES POWER, a scientific Engineer, in the business and construction of a new and effective method of erecting iron-clad fortifications, which are peculiarly adapted to our harbor, in an unusual degree, strength, durability and economy, and decidedly without consideration. He terms them his "Side-wheel Barbettes," and for stability and effectiveness exceed anything ever tried which had hitherto been suggested. The object of the invention has been to offer the most perfect resistance to the attacks of any hostile naval force, however formidable, that can be brought to bear against us.

The barbettes displayed by our authorities from the commencement of this unnatural war, to the present time, have not answering the attention upon this important subject, and the immediate necessity of adopting some reliable measures to provide in an effectual manner for the safety of our City, is a subject of anxiety and apprehension. What if there, for instance, be present any iron-clad, or even wooden, steamer down coming our waters, running by our ponderous old fortifications, from amid the heaviest shower of balls they may be capable of discharging, and doing immense damage to our City, its avenues of approach being either by Sandy Hook or Long Island Sound?

In his work on the Rangers and Defenses of New-York, Capt. Bickham, an officer well-known to the scientific world for important services rendered in the United States Coast Survey, says "the simple outline parapet of the massive castellated structure is completely inadequate (without auxiliary aid of some kind) to the perfect sealing up of a channel against the rapid passage of a hostile fleet. I shall be the first to hail the inventor who will do this."

Mr. P. proposes to construct a series of his iron-clad batteries, entirely arranged along the borders of the channel, extending from the Romer Shoals to Fort Hamilton on the one hand, and, in the manner, along the other or eastern bank, terminating somewhere in the immediate vicinity of Fort Hamilton, so that any vessel endeavoring to reach this City would necessarily be at all times in close proximity to some one or other of these forts, and, consequently, in the utmost danger of being utterly destroyed. This, if permitted, he proposes to accomplish, both permanently and promptly, to the perfect satisfaction of all parties concerned, and without incurring any of those enormous expenditures with which we are so unfortunately familiar.

The novelty of the system is exhibited in the peculiar method of constructing these batteries beneath the surface of the water, giving to them a firm foundation, below the bottom of the sea, and securing to them all the necessary space for accommodations, storage, &c., and leaving but a comparatively small portion above the surface exposed to any amount of hostile attack.

The inventor's notes furnish us the following abstract: In the first place, a hollow iron cylinder of any desired dimension—say fifty feet diameter—is sunk to a depth of forty feet through the water and made tenantable. This is filled with heavy masonry, and divided into five floors or decks; these being constructed in such a manner that the interior may be dry, and the condition within equal to that of the hold of a sea-going vessel of the largest size. These floors, or decks, individually, to cover an area of about three square feet, as in the whole number equaling a plane surface of 6,000 square feet—an ample space for all necessary purposes. The upper portion of the cylinder, above the water level, is surmounted by one or more revolving arched towers, which are covered with an unlimited thickness of metal, to render them impenetrable. These towers are the only portion of the fort exposed to the action of an enemy, and may be supplied with guns of the heaviest calibre.

Supposing a series of these forts to be placed from Flynn's Knoll, across the entrance of the channels, toward the eastern bank; then at intervals, following their course toward the Narrows, crossing them to the western bank; then at intervals again from the western bank to Flynn's Knoll. The outline of their position would represent somewhat the form of an ellipse, of which the channel would represent the transverse axis. All of these batteries would communicate with each other by submarine telegraph, and being under one command, in this manner could easily be made to concentrate their fire on any vessel that had passed the forts at Sandy Hook, and entered the space inclosed by them. This concentrated fire could be maintained by guns of the largest size, the effect upon number of which would be within hailing distance of the enemy.

This invention has received the approval of many engineers and men of science, beside those already mentioned. Mr. Power has great practical experience in the method he proposes to adopt in constructing these defences, having been the introducer of the system of sinking large iron cylinders for foundations, such as are now used for the new Harlem bridge; the first work of the kind having been made, under his contract, across the Pee Dee River, in South Carolina.

Fine Arts.

The artist CARRESPES is that somewhat rare specimen—a successful man who grows. He won flattering words of credit and profit at an age when most men in all professions are just putting their hand to the work. Still he has kept improving with every year since, as a boy of sixteen, he painted a head which was one of twelve selected from three hundred offered for purchase by that day's Art Union; and emboldened with his success moved from the centre of the State into a little studio over Duryea's, on Broadway.

His characteristic fidelity to truth in portraiture must have been of worldly advantage to him. Of late, also, he has strived more earnestly to that portion of the portrait which is the artist's gymnasium for originality. He must paint Mrs. Homely, and nothing else will satisfy her relatives. Between that and the future he can hold a variety of choices, ranging over beauty, 20 feet; [illegible]

The parties for whom these steamers are building intend, it is said, to put them on the route between New-York and Boston, via Cape Cod, thus affording shippers of freight direct daily communication between the two cities.

Messrs. FIRESTONE & FITZ are constructing for the Chinese Government three propellers; two are to be of the same size, viz.: Length over all, 160 feet; breadth of beam, 30 feet; depth of hold, 9 feet 6 inches; tonnage, 200 tons. Fine Arts.

The artist CARRESPES is that somewhat rare specimen—a successful man who grows. He won flattering words of credit and profit at an age when most men in all professions are just putting their hand to the work. Still he has kept improving with every year since, as a boy of sixteen, he painted a head which was one of twelve selected from three hundred offered for purchase by that day's Art Union; and emboldened with his success moved from the centre of the State into a little studio over Duryea's, on Broadway.

His characteristic fidelity to truth in portraiture must have been of worldly advantage to him. Of late, also, he has strived more earnestly to that portion of the portrait which is the artist's gymnasium for originality. He must paint Mrs. Homely, and nothing else will satisfy her relatives. Between that and the future he can hold a variety of choices, ranging over beauty, 20 feet; [illegible] own mind, which, though often called "necessary" for the slighting sense, may by wise management give a deeply happy interpretation to the main subject of the picture. Of this sort are all kinds of symbols denoting the age, the temperament, the peculiar characteristics of the subject; anything, in fact, which the painter knows about it besides features and figure.

At his studio, No. 645 Broadway, CARRESPES has now his several portraits in which he has developed both these points of excellence with marked success—one, the likeness of a daughter of Hon. Mr. CASEY, Chief Justice of the State of Illinois; another, that of the same gentleman's sister. This studio is made a very attractive place by every one of the works now remaining there; and the more recent ones to which we have referred show a progress which it is grateful to notice in an artist at once so young and so successful.

Movements of the Fifty-first Regiment New-York Volunteers.

To those of our readers who have friends in the Fifty-first New-York Regiment, the following story of its marches and battles, told by Mr. G. G. SCHOONMAKER, Orderly-Sergeant of Co. D, will be of interest. The regiment instituted for the second brigade of Reno's Division. On the 12th of August it broke camp at Fredericksburgh to march for Culpeper, where it arrived at 3 P. M., on the 14th, having travelled a portion of the distance by rail. On the 15th it marched to "Cedar Mountain," remaining there that night and the following day. Here the regimental band was discharged. From Cedar Mountain the regiment marched to Kelly Port and thence to Suffolk Springs and Warrenton, reaching the latter place Aug. 23; from Warrenton to Manassas Junction again, and thence, on Aug. 29, to the old Bull Run battle-ground. Until now the regiment had not met the enemy in all its marches and countermarches, though several

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We receive a report from Harrisburgh—which however, is not verified from Baltimore or Washington—that a heavy battle was in progress yesterday afternoon south of Hagerstown, Md., supposed to be between JACKSON and the National forces at Martinsburgh. We have another report—which we consider the more probable—that the rebel forces is retreating from Maryland into Virginia. LEE and JACKSON are said to have crossed the Potomac near Martinsburgh, and LONGSTREET was expected to cross farther up the river. Firing was heard yesterday in that direction, supposed to be from the rebels in covering their retreat, which has, no doubt, been steadily progressing since the evacuation of Frederick, on Thursday last.

The story of a sanguinary battle and repulse of the rebels at Harper's Ferry comes to us with considerable circumstantiality of detail, in the Baltimore American of yesterday, as gathered from a gentleman who left Frederick on Thursday afternoon. The report was credited at Frederick, both among the Union men and Secessionists. It is to the effect that the rebel General LONGSTREET had crossed the Potomac at Williamsport simultaneously with the crossing of JACKSON and LEE at Leesburgh, and taken the river road by the canal down the river in the direction of Harper's Ferry. A short distance above Harper's Ferry he attempted to ford the river with a large body of cavalry and infantry. When the river, which is merely a half a mile wide, was covered with troops, Col. MILES opened upon them with his battery, from Camp Hall and from the treasel-work on the railroad, with grape and canister, causing the river actually to run with blood, when the attempt was abandoned. The rebels had also previously made an attempt to storm the batteries on the Maryland Heights, and were repulsed by the masked batteries, scattering them and strewing the earth with the dead.

Gov. CURTIN telegraphed yesterday to Philadelphia that he wanted more troops in Harrisburgh at once; not to wait for the formation of brigades or regiments, but to send them on in companies. A prompt response was made, and last evening hundreds of armed men were hurrying through the streets to the Pennsylvania Railroad Depôt. The Governor's urgent appeal was supposed to be in consequence of the report that a great battle was proceeding south of Hagerstown.

The Baltimore Police, having obtained intelligence that a squad of rebel officers were being entertained on Friday night at a house about seven miles from the city, a squad of them proceeded to the spot, surrounded the house, and captured the entire number, as well as their entertainers. Considerable booty was also captured.

The Harrisburgh Patriot and Union of the 11th inst. says there is no undue excitement in that city, but that all are actively though quietly preparing to give the rebels, should they approach, a warm reception.

Gen. ROSECRANS, an officer of the regular army, is to assume the command of all the native forces raised for the defence of the Cumberland Valley and Harrisburgh. The force which will be led forward by Col. CAMPBELL will be under the command of Gen. REYNOLDS, and all the operations from the vicinity of Harrisburgh will be under his direction.

We learn from Nashville, by a dispatch dated the 6th inst., that Gen. BUELL's army was then advancing to the support of that city, which was threatened by the rebel forces under BRAGG. The city was being fortified, and was to be placed under command of Gen. THOMAS, with orders to defend it at all hazards. A portion of Gen. BUELL's forces had been sent toward Cincinnati to pay their respects to KIRBY SMITH's rebels in the rear, and fifteen thousand more were to leave at once for the same destination. It was doubtless a knowledge of this movement which induced the rebels threatening Cincinnati to make their hasty retreat. Eight thousand men from Gen. ROSECRANS' army had reinforced Gen. BUELL at Nashville, the fate of which place is probably ere this decided.

The rebels have been foiled in their intentions with regard to the capture of Cincinnati, if they ever entertained an idea of capturing it. A dispatch, dated yesterday, announces that they had fallen back beyond Florence, and were retreating in confusion.

According to a correspondent of the Chicago Times, the affair at Britton's Lane, Tenn., instead of being a skirmish merely, was quite a brilliant little battle. Five hundred of the Twentieth and Thirtieth Illinois Regiments are reported as having defeated five thousand rebels, with a loss on the rebel side of one hundred and seventy-nine killed and between three and four hundred wounded; of the Nationals only four were killed and eighty-two wounded. This immense disproportion in losses leads us rather to imagine that the story is somewhat exaggerated, and that this instance furnishes no exception to the general rule applicable to the war correspondents of Western papers.

The Cairo correspondent of the Chicago Times gives the following summary of the doings of the National expedition which left Fort Donelson several days since, to operate against Clarksville, Tenn.: "It reached that place on Monday. The rebels were found quite strongly posted, but, after a short engagement, they were driven off. The rebels left some stores, arms, and horses, which our forces captured. We destroyed one hundred bales of hard bread, and captured a number of prisoners. The rebels burned two hundred bales of cotton and one thousand bales of hay before abandoning the place. Gen. LEWIS and RAWSON, with their forces, returned to Fort Donelson Monday night."

Gen. HALLECK has issued an order rescinding the late recently issued, which authorized the confiscating of the baggage and furniture of the rebel military persons. They will be required, as heretofore, and will only be detained in cases of extreme necessity.

GENERAL NEWS.

Three towns in Connecticut which had not filled up their quota by volunteers were compelled to furnish the requisite number by draft, on Wednesday. Waterbury, having sent nearly 100 over her quota, escaped the draft; so also did most of the towns in that vicinity—Naugatuck, Watertown, Plymouth, Prospect, Woodbury, Bristol, &c. About half the towns in the State were equally fortunate, having raised their full quota of volunteers—among them, Bridgeport, Norwich, New-Haven, Meriden, Wallingford, Madison, Branford, New-Hartford, Norfolk and New-Britain. In Hartford 415 were drafted; in Middletown, 96; in Cheshire, 33; in Hamden, 68; in Morris, 36; in Bethany, 17; in Bethlem, 16. In Middlebury 13 names were drawn out.

The Sixth Massachusetts Regiment had a very different reception in Baltimore, on Thursday last, from that which it met on the memorable 19th of April. The citizens in great numbers assembled at the railroad depôt, waiting until sunset and after dark for the arrival of the regiment. In place of cobble-stones, the Massachusetts boys were greeted with cheers, and citizens seemed to have vied with citizens as to who should do them most honor. The guns that overlook Baltimore from Fort McHenry and Federal Hill tend admirably to the preservation of order in that city and the suppression of Secessionist sentiment, however it may lurk beneath a quiet exterior.

Gen. McDOWELL arrived in Troy on Thursday evening, and immediately repaired to the residence of his father-in-law, HENRY BRADLEY, Esq., in the Sixth Ward.

The funeral of Gen. BOTELER occurred in Philadelphia on Friday. The remains were met at the depot by a number of citizens and taken to Independence Hall, where they lay in state throughout the day. The military and citizens turned out in an imposing procession to do honor to the deceased patriot.

The health of Brig. Gen. BETTERFIELD has been so much impaired by his late active services as to demand a temporary retirement from duty in the field. He left Alexandria Thursday evening for the North.

Colonel GEO. W. PRATT, of the Ulster regiment, who was paralyzed by the concussion of a cannon ball, in leading his regiment at the battle of Manassas Plains, died on Thursday at the residence of his mother-in-law, Mrs. TRUMAN, in Albany. He was a young man of great promise, and had served as State Senator with ability and integrity.

Flour and Corn were in good request on Saturday, at full prices. Wheat was more freely offered and was less sought after, at rather lower rates. Pork and Beef were quiet, as were also Hops, Hemp, Hides, Cotton, Groceries, Foreign Liquors, Seeds, Spices and Wholebone. A fair business was transacted in Hay, Tallow, Whisky, Lard, Butter and Cheese, at uniform quotations. Rosin and Wool were active and firm. Moderate freight engagements were reported. There were 471 vessels of all classes in port.

Dissolving Views in Maryland.

The nearer the rebels get to us the less we seem to know of their movements. The mystery that has enshrouded their numbers, their course of march, and their purpose since they entered Maryland, was intensified yesterday afternoon by the very contradictory dispatches from Baltimore and Philadelphia—one announcing their abrupt departure southward and their recrossing of the Potomac into Virginia; the other maintaining their continued advance upon Pennsylvania and the actual occurrence of a battle near Hagerstown.

We think the Baltimore dispatch entitled to the more credit of the two. They are a little cooler in Baltimore, and more accurately informed than the excited Pennsylvanians can be. And, moreover, the reason of things indicates the probability of a rebel retreat. If this proves to be the true state of the case the whole rebel scheme will stand revealed as follows: They came into Maryland in full force, determined to draw the Union army from Washington and fight a grand pitched battle for the possession of the National Capital and for decision of the war. They threatened to invade Pennsylvania as a feint, to hurry up our pursuit of them from Washington; and as a decoy, they fell back westwardly from Frederick, hoping, if pursued, to throw a force across from Leesburgh in our rear. This plan, if successful, would have given them a certain victory and insured the capture of Washington.

The plan was truly a bold one, and when we think of the excitement and clamor that ensued in the loyal States, and the general demand for an immediate rush upon the foe, we can see that there was imminent danger of being outwitted by the rebels to the end.

But safer counsels prevailed. Washington was quickly and quietly made safe from capture by rebel assault, and then our heavy army was moved off to confront the enemy and keep him from Baltimore. General McCLELLAN's theory was said to be this: The enemy is in too great force in Maryland to stand still. He will eat out the country in a single day. He must either attack the National army, or he must pass on toward Pennsylvania, or—retreat. He did not fear the rebel attack—he was prepared for it. The advance of the rebels into Pennsylvania would have been finally fatal to them; and a retreat into Virginia would be a rebel failure and badly demoralizing. These three alternatives were presented to the rebel General LEE, and this distinguished as well as disinterested "liberator" of Maryland shakes the dust of that oppressed State from his feet, and returns to the sacred soil of Virginia!

This appears to be a reasonable solution of the very extraordinary rebel demonstration in Maryland. If they have fallen back, how else can we explain it? It is impossible to believe that they crossed fifty or one hundred thousand men into Maryland, with artillery and cavalry in great force, merely to march out again. If they are gone, it is because they are foiled. If they are not gone, it is not easy to see how they are to achieve success in any path now left open to them. Acting on the belief that they are advancing, Pennsylvania has made gigantic preparations to greet them with "bloody hands to hospitable graves." Whichever way they may now turn, North, East or South, there is no prospect of that cheery march of triumph in which they so lately and so vauntingly indulged. Such is the aspect of affairs at the present writing. But who can foretell what new phase the campaign will present on Monday morning?

These figures illustrate the stealthy manner in which a Slave State has been organized and settled there, in defiance of the National laws made for the protection of the Indians. The fact is, it is not the Indians, but the whites, who are settled in large numbers in the territory, and wield a preponderatory influence in its affairs, that are the real slaveholders.

Military Accountability—A Demand for Rigor.

Responsibility! strict, stern responsibility, is what the whole people demand now from the Government. That tens of thousands of our young men should be slaughtered through the incompetency or stupidity of individuals who have set themselves up as leaders and Generals; that property should be destroyed by the millions—properly paid for by the muscle and sweat of every man among us; that we should be plunging into an abyss whose depth no eye can measure, simply because this officer must be retained from political motives, or that from personal reasons, is a disgrace and damage beyond anything even that we have yet passed through. Who is Gen. POPE, or Gen. McDOWELL, or Gen. McCLELLAN, or any other General, that for a moment the interests of this vast country and the lives of tens of thousands should be risked, because his personal feelings or those of his supposed clique may be injured by a severe investigation?

We have had no accountability thus far. Respectable gentlemen have taken the command of armies, and have experimented with them as they might, with any scientific subject, and after having lost a few thousand men, brought desolation to as many households, and disgraced the National name, have retired complacently to private life, secure against further molestation. Others have betrayed strongholds, containing priceless property, from timidity; others have been intoxicated even on the field of battle; others have been surprised in a disgraceful manner, and have lost regiments of men; others have spent long and precious months in inaction and dilatoriness; some have exposed gallant corps of young men to overwhelming numbers, or they have ended a whole campaign in defeat and failure, and brought this vast Republic to the brink of destruction; yet so far as we know, in not a single instance, has a court-martial sat upon any of these failures. From all that appears to the public, defeats and loss are treated by the authorities just as victory and gain. An officer may see his whole command melt away by disaster, and feel that personally he is as well off as if he had succeeded.

With this general impression among the leading officers, of there being no strict accountability, a want of thoroughness and watchfulness must spread through the army. Laxity beginning at the top, will reach to the bottom. "Surprises" and blunders will be constant experiences.

The President and the whole public should understand that under such an easy policy we cannot succeed against this desperate rebellion. Such a state of things is unknown in any other military service of the world. No successful war could be carried on under it. If it be, indeed, one result of the President's good nature, that his feelings indispose him to punishing an unsuccessful officer, it is only another illustration of an old historical experience, that in guiding tremendous revolutions, "good nature" is usually the most cruel of assistants. A voice of agony comes up from a suffering nation, demanding the sternest accountability from our military leaders. When we think what it is we are approaching, if this is not exacted—a bankruptcy beyond all experience; taxes which shall burden unborn generations; a disgrace to our national name, which will leave us, in the opinion of the world, under the heel of the South; the useless loss of hundreds of thousands of our young men; an interminable and chaotic war, until America, like Mexico, becomes the byword and scorn of mankind, we would suppose that the Government must be spurred to the most unrelenting energy.

Every General ought to understand that for him to blunder is to be disgraced, and that a dishonorable defeat is death. Incompetency, cowardice and stupidity should be the objects of the sternest punishment. An officer must know when he is before the enemy, that he must choose between a victory or a court-martial. Thus the French Directory manufactured Generals. So can we at length put an end to blunders, and surprises, and defeats.

AMERICAN JUDGMENTS OF EUROPEAN REVOLUTIONS.—If we learn rightly all the lessons the rebellion is calculated to teach, one of its indirect benefits will be to tone down that licentious habit of mind which has generally led Americans to throw their sympathies on the revolutionary or anarchical side of political movements in other, and especially in European countries. A notable proof that we have not yet learned this lesson as well as we should is afforded by the line of comment of the American Press on the late enterprise of GARIBALDI, which has just come to a disastrous end. The majority, probably, of journals in this country hailed this uprising as highly proper and meritorious, applauded GARIBALDI in his various acts in opposition to the Government, and finally, when conflict was actually precipitated, threw their sympathies on the side of the Red-Shirted revolter.

In this course they were actuated, doubtless, by no ill will toward the Italian Kingdom; probably they did not consider the matter deeply at all; but, remembering his old career of glory, and considering that the liberation of Rome and Venice was a desirable object, they applauded the end without taking any heed of the means by which this end was sought. This means was nothing less than downright rebellion, with the purpose of "destroying the Italy which he had himself created," as GARIBALDI audaciously avowed. The enterprise bore no resemblance whatever to the glorious movement of '59, which all the world rejoiced in, while the late mad device was one which every lover of rational freedom deplored and the Italian people themselves condemned.

Now, the loyal Italian people would have precisely the same right to complain of the encouragement lent this anarchical attempt that we had in the case of the British journals which eagerly seized on secession gleefully to shout that the Great Republic was forever broken up. It is true, GARIBALDI is a very different type of character from DAVIS, TOOMBS and FLORY; but the enterprise of GARIBALDI made for the identical result aimed at by those men—the destruction of a just and good constitutional Government. We have had some experience of what constitutional Government is worth; and while the land of Democracy will always throw its sympathies on the side of a people struggling for freedom against its oppressors, we must guard against that habit of intellectual license which leads men to delight in revolution merely because it is revolution.

The Golden Gate Disaster.

In discussing the loss of the Golden Gate a few days ago, and endeavoring to fix responsibility for the lamentable loss of life on that occasion, we pointed to the self-evident fact that the vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company are not properly constructed or fitted out for the business in which they are employed, or else that the discipline of the ships is far less perfect than it ought to be. The latter proposition is sustained by the fact that, in the case of the Golden Gate, a portion of her boats were burned at their tackles, that nobody in the hour of peril and panic seemed to have any special charge of the means of rescue, and that these means were consequently in part destroyed, while the remainder were made efficient to the saving of many less lives than they were capable of rescuing from an awful and sudden death.

Some friends of the Company seem under the impression that our strictures did it an injustice; but these impressions are confessedly based on their knowledge of the discipline of the ships and the general management of the Company as they existed several years ago. The time was when the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's Line was one of the finest in the world. In those days they were managed with the utmost liberality. Receiving enormous sums from the Government and the traveling public, the Company—then controlled, in great measure, by WM. H. ASPINWALL—paid liberal salaries to its commanders and other sailing officers, and employed an amply sufficient number of hands in all the departments of their service. Under that régime they never failed to command the highest skill and efficiency, and the greatest attention on the part of all their employes, to secure the safety and comfort of their passengers. But all this is changed of late years, as we have reason to believe. Five years ago, for instance, it was the custom of their commanders to drill their crews to the management of fire apparatus and of the boats, in order that, in case of sudden emergency, there might be no needless panic, but that the very most should be made of the means of safety that was possible. We are assured by frequent travelers over the California route, via Panama, that they have witnessed no such efforts to promote discipline during the last two or three years. Occasionally these drills may still be had. If so, they are the exception, now-a-days, and not the rule.

Nor is the falling off in the management of the line confined to this vital matter of discipline alone. The company never used to run such ships as the Orizaba or the Uncle Sam. They were not in the habit, during their better days, of over-crowding their vessels with either passengers or freight—carrying 1,300 passengers for instance, when the law would limit them to 800 or 900 only. Then, too, the fare and attendance were all that could be desired, and exactly what the passengers who paid a high price for tickets had the right to expect. The Company was content then with fair profits on their business. They did not insist upon twenty per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, (not twenty per cent. per quarter as a slip of the pen made us say in a former article) reckoned upon $4,000,000 of stock, when less than half that sum would put on a line superior in all respects to the present. To-day, the ships are, some of them, inferior, and the fare on all indifferent. While all articles of consumption cost the Company less now than formerly, and their rates for passage have not for many years been so high as now, it is notorious that the fare is less abundant and inferior in quality.

If we mistake not, the great falling off in the matter of security to life on board these ships, however, grows out of the niggardliness of the Company in cutting down largely the numbers of their crews, and reducing to the minimum the salaries of their officers. A berth on board a Pacific Mail Steamship Company's steamer is no longer a prize worth the sleepless vigilance of the best men of the profession to obtain and retain. And, if we mistake not, the reduced numbers of their ships' crews, during the last year or two, renders such disciplining as we have hinted at, in anticipation of an emergency, quite impossible. The men have so much indispensable work to do, and the relieffs are so small, that no time can be spared for drilling at the pumps or exercise with the boats. We submit to the public judgment whether such conduct is excusable. There is a great wrong somewhere. We believe we have indicated where it lies. If any one disputes our theory, we ask him, in the name of humanity, to tell us how it happens that the Golden Gate burned at sea, in broad daylight, within 2½ miles of the shore, and that only 75 of all her hundreds of passengers and crew were saved.

The San Francisco Bulletin, of the 15th ult., just to hand, furnishes us testimony in regard to the Company's present management, in connection with another of their steamers. The Oriziba had just arrived from Panama, and the Bulletin says:

"Among the passengers who came up on the Orizaba yesterday, is a gentleman who has been much at sea. He tells us that they only needed one such gale as is quite a common thing upon the Atlantic to have sent the Orizaba to the bottom. He says she was overloaded. She brings 1800 of freight. This no doubt has told that the baggage had to go on deck. As it was, with a calm sea and pleasant weather, no harm overtook her or her passengers. In every statement was a life-preserver, but very many did not know what they were for. After the Orizaba flight learned how the tubs were used, there was daily practice with the boats by which a person about the size of a sugar hogshead was launched successfully thrice! Our sea-faring friend suggests that on the present line of steamers it is almost impossible to collect the requisite number of sailors, as a general thing young men are induced by exploits such as we have seen lately to ship. He suggests that on each end of each steamer there should be a small fire-engine, supplied with hose of good calibre, and with one or both of such, a fire would stand little chance of making much headway."

The Pay-Roll.

The difficulties now occurring in the Fifty-third Regiment are a text for a few words relative to our mistakes in paying our volunteers in field and camps.

It is not only necessary that our men should be paid the sum awarded, to the fullest extent, and paid promptly, but another and the most requisite point is, that they be paid with the shortest possible period of time intervening between payments.

The soldier must be looked on, in that regard, simply as we would view the laborer. The man works better and more cheerfully who receives his earnings promptly every day or every week. Had he to receive them only monthly, or worse, quarterly, discontent, unwilling labor and suffering would be the inevitable result. He would be taking all the risks of the capitalist, without his profits, and after having suffered through a season of privation, would, as a certain result, become lavish when accumulated wages reached him.

So it is with the soldier. He enlists and leaves a family, perhaps in want. He goes into the hustle and danger of camp-life, where it may be that the emptiness of his pocket, and their want, is for the instant forgotten. He serves one, two, three months, and no pay. In the meantime, the soldier is the victim of sutlers, who, for the safe credit they accord him, only charge the moderate profits of three or four hundred per cent. The family at home during this interval are living or starving as best they may, or possibly keeping the wolf away by the pittance from the relief fund. At last, at the end of three months, the pay is forthcoming, after the sutler is satisfied, and the soldier holds a tride of what he has earned.

The chances are equal then, whether the temptation for the man who has been penniless for three months is not too great, and will not lead him to an improvident use of his fund, leaving the family at home to struggle without his aid or with but a small portion. To a certain degree our system of bounties overcomes this immediate want, but in most cases it is a reasonable supposition that the bounty is soon spent, and a few months leaves the recruit dependent upon his pay.

In country places credit can be had for articles of food, when based upon the pay-roll; this does not create the misery it does in the city; but in the latter the burthen falls heavily on many a waiting and watching wife, surrounded by her little family, who are bearing silently the brunt and bitterness of the war in want and privation, or worse, perhaps in vice and shame, forced on them by the terrible necessities of their position.

The time has passed when silence on this point was patriotism. The Government at this moment stands, financially, on the topmost round of the ladder. It matters little to our rulers whether the army is paid quarterly, monthly or weekly; they have the money. And it is but that the fiat should go forth and the thing is done.

The most military nations of Europe have long ago adopted the plan of paying their soldiers within periods of five to fifteen days. The result of the plan is that the soldier is enabled to provide his small wants with economy, and upon pay-day does not give way to drunkenness or extravagance. His family are not sufferers, while his temper is sweetened and his soldierly importance heightened. The paymaster also gets the benefit of the system by having his accounts less complicated, and lessening both his labor and his responsibility. To it we must come at last, and the sooner we do so the better.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER TO SAVE THE WEST.—The situation of the campaign in the West is almost, if not altogether, as discouraging as it is in the East. Kentucky, excepting in the immediate vicinity of Louisville and Covington, seems to be overrun and given up to the possession of the enemy. We read of guerrilla bands in every part of the interior where Union sentiment has heretofore been almost unanimous; and in addition to these predatory gangs we know that heavy columns of rebel soldiery under KIRBY SMITH, HUMPHREY MARSHALL and JOHN MORGAN are pressing close to vital points on the Ohio River, threatening to carry the war beyond that line.

Tennessee is nearly abandoned by the Union troops. Gen. MORGAN, if he still holds Cumberland Gap, holds it because he cannot leave except as a prisoner of war. Gen. BUELL has evacuated Huntsville, and fallen back upon Nashville. That he will try to hold the capital of Tennessee is promised at latest dates. Gen. GRANT's army, holding Bolivar, Jackson and Memphis, in West Tennessee, has been weakened materially, we infer, by the detachment of troops to operate at points on the Ohio River. Bolivar and Jackson will probably be evacuated, and Memphis be the sole position held by the National army in that part of the State.

Strong fortifications have been erected at Memphis, and as the gunboats can cooperate with its garrison, it is probable that Memphis can be held, by even a very small force against any body of rebels that JEFF. THOMPSON, who seems to be its gad-fly, can bring against it. The gunboats can do little good in beating off an approaching enemy, as the bluff on which Memphis stands is very high, and firing over them, as at Vicksburgh, would be wholly at random. But still they could keep communication open with the garrison, furnish ammunition, food and reinforcements, if needed, and probably defeat any attempt to retake the city. Columbus and Island No. 10 will doubtless be kept out of the enemy's clutches; and no whatever other reverses overtake us in the West, we shall unquestionably keep a strong hold on the key-points of the Mississippi River. While this is done, the rebel States of the southwest are never safe. Their armies may push up the Ohio, may throw columns across it—they can make no permanent lodgment on free soil. But with the Mississippi River in our possession, the Gulf States are always exposed to devastating invasions, that will compel them to draw back their overland armies for home defence.

Our Government can act so long, we think, in learning that the true way to clear Kentucky and the border States of rebel armies is to start a formidable flotilla down the Mississippi, with instructions to invade the cotton region and destroy all the agencies there at work in support of the rebellion. The cotton season of the year is coming, and by the time a descent of the Mississippi River is planned and prepared for, it will be safe to move down it in any force.

Will the authorities see and appreciate the value of this counteracting invasion? By not using the Mississippi River, the Government abandons an ally worth two hundred thousand men in the West.

Rebel Recruiting in Maryland and Kentucky.

The rebel army has made but a small addition to its numbers during its brief stay in Maryland. That part of the State which they occupied, though not entirely loyal, is yet most loyal section, and the lines held by our army pretty effectually prevented recruits rushing from Baltimore, or from the southern and secession counties. We hear of several villages in Frederick County sending their companies of volunteers, and of an entire regiment in one town arming and equipping itself, and marching to join the invaders. But, though Gen. LEE wooed the Marylanders very affectionately, we doubt whether he has obtained twenty-five hundred recruits in the State during the week or ten days in which his army has been encamped on its soil. That is just about the number of Marylanders previously in the rebel service; while the whole will not make as many troops as the State has voluntarily furnished to the National army.

The rebel force which holds the eastern half of Kentucky has met with far better success in recruiting in that State. There seems to be little doubt that large numbers of Kentuckians have joined the bands of MORGAN, KIRBY SMITH, HUMPHREY MARSHALL, and others, within the last month. The bold raids of these fellows has attracted the admiration of the young men of the State, and in the excitement of the hour, they have broke loose from restraint and from principle, and have attached themselves to the freebooters. There are in all the Kentucky towns, as in all the towns of the South and Southwest, large numbers of young men who have nothing particular to do, and on whose hands time hangs heavily, and when, on some Summer day, a lot of harum-scarum rebel horsemen rush into the village with guidons flying and sabres flashing, the temptation to mount and join them in their adventure is almost irresistible. They are all of them used to the rifle, accustomed to exposure and hardship, and always ready for a fight; and they make first-rate troops for the kind of work that is now going on in the West. It is a misfortune that this element was not taken up in a far greater extent than it has been by the National Government, and put to its appropriate work in East Tennessee, in South-western Virginia, and along the Northern line of the Gulf States. It requires, however, action, excitement and enthusiasm, and could not be kept for long months in camp, as our Western army has been. If the rebel invading force is driven out of Kentucky, a large part of these men will not follow its fortunes, but will remain behind, or will quietly return home, as the bulk of Gen. PRICE's army did when he was driven out of Missouri.

GRADE OF OFFICER AS A LEGAL TITLE.—It is a well-established political fact that external pressure upon a country has a tendency to unite all parties and factions in it, so as to present a single front to the enemy. The assault of the rebels on Fort Sumter extinguished almost entirely the former party divisions, that had been known under the names of Republican, Democrat, Native American. So far as the masses of the people were concerned, the beginning of war did wipe out all trace of party lines.

But not so with all the leaders of party. There were some political divisions of more than usual intensity of hate and jealousy. Not even the peril of the Republic could allay the animosity that kept them alive. The lion and the lamb might lie down together when the elements raged; but what could induce the Tammany Hall to Mozart, or lead Mozart back to the fold of Tammany? Certainly the trembling of the pillars of the temple of Liberty did not bring these factions to harmony.

But a motive more powerful than that of patriotism has got to work. At Albany the lion and the lamb have lain down together, and a little child is leading them. Tammany receives Mozart to its lair, and the "Constitutional Union" infant puts a silken cord about their necks. What works this phenomenon? the wondering country asks. The hope of carrying the State elections and gaining the spoils of office!

GEN. BUTTERFIELD.—The physicians have succeeded in healing the attack of typhoid which had a serious hold upon Gen. BUTTERFIELD, consequent upon exposure, &c. The General has been granted leave of absence for a short time, and goes to his home on the North River for rest and recuperation. He has taken an active and efficient part in all the recent engagements, both in front of Richmond and of Washington, and has won distinguished honor, not only by his personal gallantry and skill, but by the admirable training and discipline he has given his troops. We trust he will speedily be restored to health and the army.

Payment of Troops.

It is a matter of surprise that the Government does not pay off its soldiers more promptly. It may be that the Government has paid over the gross amount; and in these times, when all persons handling money of the Government are trying to make the most money, the Paymasters may be putting out at interest money which should be paid over to the soldiers. Look at the Seventh Regiment, mustered out long since. Are they paid off? Look at the Twenty-second Regiment, mustered out not yet yet paid off. Where doubt is not. For in paper—the Government have that. The poor soldiers, who go to be mustered out, or if mustered out, to get their money, are put off from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, from time to time, and should they get a few days over their time, are then called on to pay. Very well, pay them. But does it take a week or more to make out a few days' extra pay coming to, or is that the excuse for holding on to the money and making interest on the soldiers' pay?

This delay affects volunteering, for parents will not leave, and some cannot, until they get their pay; for it will not be paid on the order of the soldier to any person, for that has been tried.

PORTUGUESE FORCE OPEN TO FOREIGN GRAIN.

The following dispatch has been received at the State Department:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, LISBON, Aug. 17, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the copy of a decree (in translation) just issued by His Majesty's Government, admitting foreign breadstuffs in the ports of this kingdom, free from the usual and established duty.

It is exceptional in acts of the Cortes and decrees, in former years of scarcity, inasmuch as flour is now included in the free list, which, except in very rare instances, was confined to grain exclusively.

The answers to official inquiries in regard to the crops, rendered this step necessary at once, and without waiting for authority from the Cortes, which will happen the decree upon assembling.

My previous dispatches on the subject have necessarily led you to expect some such intelligence. It is desirable, for the interests of agriculture and commerce, that publicity should be given to this information in an authentic form, in order that whatever advantage may proceed from it, may be enjoyed equally by both.

It may be stated also in this connection that the belief exists, in well informed circles, that the supply of cereals in Europe will be more limited than has been expected, and the demand for American products correspondingly greater.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
JAMES E. HARVEY.

To Hon. Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

In consideration of what has been represented to me by the Ministers of all the Departments, and after hearing the Council of State, I am pleased to decree the following:

ARTICLE 1. The free introduction is permitted of foreign cereals, wheat, corn, rye, barley and oats in grain, flour and baked bread, through the inland and maritime of the Kingdom, until the end of April, 1863. The foreign cereals thus admitted are only subject to the duties which national grains pay when dispatched for consumption.

ART. 2. After the expiration of the period marked in this decree, the cereals referred to therein may still be admitted, on proof being shown before the Government, after hearing the competent Social department, that the same cereals left directly the port of shipment for those of this Kingdom in sufficient time to have arrived within the prescribed period, under the circumstances of an ordinary voyage.

Let the Ministers and Secretaries of State, of all the Departments first referred, these presents, and cause the same to be executed.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

The Indians Reported to be Ugly—Outrages—The Overland Mail Business—Necessity for Keeping Communication Free—Brigham Young's Northern Trip.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Friday, Aug. 29, 1862.

Mr. WILLIAM S. GOBLE, druggist, arrived in this city, per mail stage, on Tuesday night. He had been on a business visit to the States, purchasing goods for himself, and purchasing and freighting for others. He reports the Indians "ugly," particularly on the Sweet-water route, they still persisting in killing a white man or two occasionally.

On the western route, on the Humboldt, and in the Ruby Valley, similar reports arise, or at least the reports are flying about here.

In the Salmon River and Oregon Countries, about Fort Hall and the emigrant routes in that section, the red man continues hostile, as in many places elsewhere, and ever and anon imbrues his swarthy hands in the blood of the whites. Very little reliable news reaches us from that northern region, in consequence of the comparative infrequency of travel thence to this direction. Three wounded persons, however, recently arrived in this city, being a portion of a company of a dozen, with packhorses, journeying from the West toward the East, and who were attacked near Fort Hall, on the 5th inst., compelled to flee, after five of their number were wounded, until they met a Salmon River train, with which they returned to Snake River.

On the 5th a Beaver and Salmon River company were attacked near the same place, with a loss of five killed and two wounded. The Indians managed to secure two wagons and bodies of groceries.

In this Territory, in a place or two, the natives evince their chronic fondness for indiscriminate exquisition in the animal line. For instance, a day or two ago, a band of one or two hundred horses was driven off a range on the Weber, one Mr. NATHAN TANNER feeling that much poorer by the operation.

These cases, with others, especially the tragic display of Indian savagery in Minnesota, would indicate a rather general hostile disposition toward the whites, among the Indians.

Taking this into consideration, with the past six months' history of mail operations across the Plains and the Rocky Mountains, and there is some ground for uncertainty in regard to the future of the overland mail business.

Little need be said in respect to the importance of the Pacific and the Atlantic States continuing united in national bonds, but one of the strongest links in these bonds will undoubtedly be a rapid and thoroughly reliable overland mail communication. The railroad's a just the thing, but that is many years in the future, and "while the grass grows, the cattle starve." The present and the immediate future is the all-important time. Now, the sea is open, and communication is free in that direction. But God only knows how long that can be said.

Allow me to suppose the case of England or France, or both, espousing the cause of the rebels. Then sea communication with the Pacific States will be very risky. And if the Indians should cause such a suspension of overland mail facilities, in conjunction with the sea blockade, as was the case a short time ago, how would California and Oregon stand affected? Their ports might be bombarded and their commerce destroyed by the action of English, French, or Anglo-French mail-coated frigates, while the American Monitors would have a large stretch of Union and rebel Atlantic coast to look after and defend. The Pacific States, sooner than endure such an unequal contest, would be likely to consider themselves, by event of Providence, forever separated from the Atlantic States. But, if the overland mail were well sustained, and kept its running order in every contingency, why, then, overland travel would vastly increase, the rapid settlement of the divers little oases of the pisino, mountains and deserts on the overland route would be greatly accelerated, and the two slopes would be mutually strengthened and bound together in cords of national unity.

And the contingency I have supposed is not altogether extraordinary. The large increase of population contributed by the Atlantic to the Pacific slope, the present year, appears to be mainly composed of persons who already have had enough of the war, and who are fleeing westward to escape the sound of the roaring cannon. This kind of population will increase from year to year. Their votes, of course, may, in the future, be expected on the side of peace, though at the cost of separation from the older States.

I therefore consider it important that the Government should hold itself prepared, in case of any future interruption on the Central Overland Route, to promptly order sufficient help from the nearest available point, so as to prevent, if possible, another single day's stoppage in the delivery of the mails. Some such step may yet prove essential to the welfare and integrity of the Union. Doubtless, in this Territory, any needful number of men or amount of material would be found available, at any time, to secure uninterrupted communication, so far as the centre of the route was concerned.

Quite a number of persons in this city and vicinity are busy rigging up their teams and making other arrangements to accompany BRIGHAM on his southern trip next week. The journey to and fro will probably extend to eight hundred miles, in round numbers—equal to the journey hence to Fort Kearney. However, it will most likely all be accomplished within a month, preaching, exhorting and praying included. If it must be so, for the "authorities" will scarcely be absent from the great Semi-Annual Conference on the 6th of October, in this city.

A little boy, son of DAVID HUNTER, while in the Cañon with his father, who was getting wood, had the misfortune to have his thigh broken the other day, through a log rolling on him. This is rather a bad case.

The Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society is pushing into notice. The annual "fair" is announced to be held in this city on the 2d, 3d, and 4th of October, when quite a budget of prizes will be competed for, books, seeds, and plants being by far the most numerous. "Diplomas" occupy a far less conspicuous place than formerly, they evidently being appreciated much less than more substantial tokens. The Society has undergone a sort of reconstruction, has had the rivets fastened, the screws tightened, and the joints and wheels oiled BRIGHAM, not having been perfectly satisfied with its former performances. Now that the concern has been generally "slicked up" we may naturally expect an advance in the show.

The emigration toward the West is tapering off, and the little traders of this city are complaining that the emigrants have no money—are as poor as rats. The well-to-do folks evidently took an early start, while those blest with poverty bring up the rear. Next we shall have the Mormon emigrants pouring in upon us, all of them hungry, poor and needy. Labor will then be much cheaper and more abundant than it has been all Summer.

FROM CANADA.

A Meeting at Quebec of Delegates from New-Brunswick and Nova Scotia to Deliberate on the Subject of Intercolonial Railroads, Intercolonial Free-Trade, and the Confederation of British North America—Three British Governors and all their Cabinets in Consultation.

From Our Own Correspondent.

QUEBEC, Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1862.

When I came down, the other day, from Montreal to this centre of political power and intrigue, and saw on the train with me Mr. C. J. BRYDGES, the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, I fancied there was something unusual on the tapis, and when I saw this "Napoleon of Canadian railways" soon afterward in close consultation with Mr. EDWARD WATKIN, the political agent of that line, I was convinced that my surmise was not wrong. It soon afterward received additional confirmation, for I learned that the Earl of MULGRAVE, the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova-Scotia, had come up in a Canadian Government steam yacht, and was staying at Lord MONCK's, the Governor-General's, while other celebrities from the Lower Provinces were soon expected. They have now arrived. The Vice-Royal party at His Excellency's embraces (in addition to Lord MULGRAVE, his amiable lady and Hon. Misses PEPPER,) Hon. A. GAMBLE, Lieutenant-Governor of New-Brunswick; Hon. Messrs. HOWE and MCCULLY, the leading ministers of Nova Scotia, and Hon. Messrs. TILLEY and MITCHELL, of New-Brunswick, are here too.

The proposed object of the gathering is to deliberate upon—probably to accept, with some modifications—the Duke of Newcastle's proposal in reference to raising the funds to construct the Intercolonial Railway, which is to run from Halifax to Quebec. Messrs. BRYDGES & WATKIN (backed by the BARINGS and ELLICES) wish that line constructed, because they could palm off upon it the 120 miles of their road which lies eastward of Quebec, and does not earn grease for its engine wheels. Messrs. TILLEY & MITCHELL would be glad to get it built and sell to it the New-Brunswick Government Railway, also a non-paying enterprise, as a feeder. Messrs. HOWE and MCCULLY have a precisely similar object in view. So we shall see what we shall see, soon—some curious political manoeuvring, no doubt. The papers here assert that the delegates are going to propound some vast scheme for bringing Intercolonial free trade about, but whether they will succeed in doing that, is very doubtful. First of all, it has to be proved that the Provinces themselves desire it, and next, that England would agree to it; and this is a consideration, for Great Britain has not been too well pleased with Canada and Tariffs, of late.

Another set of gossiping fellows tell you that the Governors have met to organize a sort of general militia system, for defence against the Colonial bugbear, the terrible United States. You may be sure of this, though, that the Governors won't trouble themselves about anything so foolish. They know that the real feeling of the people in all these Provinces is a desire to live at peace and in friendship with the States, to which they are bound by very close and numerous commercial ties. I find that several hotheads and crackbrained newspaper writers here, as in Montreal, are violently assault in applauding when JACKSON performs an exploit or MORGAN effects a raid. This, however, is not the sentiment of the bulk of the tax-paying community.

Quebec is just the same old place it was when I was last here. The war in the States, though it seems to set the rest of the world on fire, has no influence on the doings of Quebecers. About the usual number of ships have come for the usual quantity of timber. The military people have not mounted a single gun the more on the rotten old fortifications; indeed, the Commandant, Col. FAVERSHAM, with three companies of Royal Artillery, is just going "home"—and, except that the hotel keepers complain of the lack of money of American visitors, you would not know, from the manner of living here, that there was any trouble at all on the Potomac.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

BUENOS AYRES, S. A., Monday, July 14, 1862.

The South American Republics and the United States locate the natal day in July. North of the line the Fourth is the grand day, and here it is the 9th. These days were both duly regarded in this city. On the Fourth most of the American citizens here paid special attention to the day. The United States Consulate was crowded; the large rooms of SAMUEL B. HALE, Esq., formerly of Boston was also filled, and other groups aggregated with the utmost good feeling and good cheer. Hon. M. KING, the United States Minister, was very fortunate in two or three speeches, as also was United States Commissioner WASHBURNE, of the Mission to Paraguay.

July 9 witnessed the inauguration and installation of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Free Masons of the Argentine Confederation. It was an occasion of great Masonic display, and was attended by the officers of the Grand Lodge of this country. The installation being ended, there was a supper prepared that would have honored the best hotels of the North. Among the guests were Gen. MITRE, the Governor and Provisional President; Gen. GELLY Y OBES, Minister of War, and other prominent native gentlemen.

The occasion gathered importance to me from the fact that I saw several of the same gentlemen on the next day among the most honored attendants upon High Mass, at which the Bishop himself presided. As he anathematizes all Masons, he must have felt somewhat embarrassed, if he knew all, when twice the incense was waved before the Mason MITRE and other Masonic officers of the Government.

The service in the Cathedral on Aug. 9 was more imposing than usual, but it was much less thinly attended. The display of troops also was much inferior to former years, perhaps because the Government feels quite safe, and does not need to manufacture public opinion.

There is now before the National Congress here a project for a railroad from Rosario to Cordoba, which will in all probability pass. Rosario is a river town of 17,000 inhabitants. The distance to Cordoba is 10 leagues, through a level and very rich country, chiefly devoted to grazing. Cordoba contains in the city about 20,000 inhabitants, and the province is reckoned at 100,000. It is the richest, most enlightened, most enterprising of all the provinces outside of Buenos Ayres. Cordoba was for two centuries the Athens of South America, being the location of the first and most extensive University planted by the original Spaniards. The province abounds with every form of material wealth. The estimate for the road is 4,000 pounds sterling per mile; and the Government guarantees an annual dividend of 7 per cent on that estimate, and gives all the land for tracks and for buildings. The railroad is to carry all mails and all Government property at half of usual rates. The work must be begun in 18 months, and must be completed in five years.

Could not our own Legislatures learn somewhat from South American legislation. The "half price" clause for Government transportation would, in case of war, be an item of importance. The "mails free" would, on the Pacific Railroad, be a feature of great interest; and does not the United States Government suffer enough to warrant the insertion of that item?

No one here seems to doubt the permanence of the present peace in this country. No ruler has ever had more obstacles in his country than Gen. MITRE, the present Governor and the President-Elect, and yet one has ever been so mild. He seems to be out of sight, he is seldom heard, he is not a partisan, and yet he is felt to be the resistless minister; and hardly a man down south of Mitre but talks with love and admiration. He has no opposition for the Presidency, and while he presides we shall have peace.

The Mississippi, a United States steamer, leaves this port for China, in a day or two, whither she goes to enter the local tea-carrying trade. This leaves the river trade of this country to the little, dirty, inconvenient tugboats which are, every few months, converted into war steamers, sold and resold, and breaking and repairing, greatly to the inconvenience of the public. The Mississippi was a model steamer, and she had in Capt. SHIVERICK a model captain, and, it is believed, made fine returns. Why not send out more of the loose steamers flying about New-York?

The artesian well proves successful as to finding water, but alas! it is brackish. We must await experiments to find good water.

Guanos are again going down, having gone 10 in 15 days. To-day they are 400, with every prospect of going much lower. It is quite likely that a new arrangement will be made, by which all Custom-house dues shall be collectable at the permanent rate of 240 pesos to the doubloon.

Over the wonders of cotton in this great valley the experiment of cotton growing will be tried this year.

Of American vessels there have arrived during the half month closing to-day the following: Rebecca Goldsey, Tahmont, Alvan, Sorrento; departed, none.

But little lumber has arrived and but little flour, prices remain as before. Sugar and coffee are scarce. There is little demand for freights. There has gone to the United States 12,000 dry hides, bought at 42@44 Rials silver.

ADELANTE.

MOVEMENTS OF THE MILITARY.

Arrival and Departure of Troops.

THE TWENTY-FIRST CONNECTICUT.

Very early indeed yesterday morning the Twenty-first Connecticut Regiment arrived at Jersey City, coming in by the steamer City of New-York, instead of on the railroad. The regiment mustered over a thousand men, splendidly armed and equipped. After breakfasting at the railroad depot it proceeded on its way to the seat of war. A list of the field and line officers was published in the TIMES of Friday.

THE ELEVENTH NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

The Eleventh New-Hampshire also arrived at Jersey City very early yesterday morning on board of the steamer Plymouth Rock. The regiment paraded the maximum regulation number of men, and is efficiently officered. Col. HERRMAN has been editor of the Manchester (N. H.) Union, a Universalist minister, and a prominent politician. Lieut.-Col. COLLINS is by profession a lawyer, but has had considerable experience in connection with the militia of his State. Major FISK has seen service, and is very popular with the men. He has lost an arm in action. Some of the line officers have likewise smelt gunpowder.

Military Movements in the City.

THE STANTON LEGION.

The formal mustering of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment, Col. W. H. ALLEN, took place on Thursday last, at Camp New-Dorp, and at the same time the Government advance of $13 was disbursed to the men. The payments of all Government and State bounties cannot be concluded before this evening. Rifles have been received for the armament of the men, but were not issued last evening. The departure of this regiment of the Legion will, it is now decided, take place on Monday. The organization of the Third Regiment of the Legion was effected yesterday, including nearly all the supernumerary officers of the regiment just completed. There is no foundation for the rumor that the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment is to be under Gen. CONCHLIN'S command.

Subjoined is a list of the officers: Lieutenant-Colonel, James A. Stevenson; Major, John T. Burgess; Adjutant, Charles Lord; Quartermaster, W. W. Perkins; Surgeon, ——; Assistant-Surgeon, W. L. Lindsey; Second Assistant-Surgeon, ——; Quartermaster Sergeant, ——; Hospital Steward, ——; Sergeant-Major, ——.

Captain, Geo. Tucker; First Lieutenant, L. Ham; Second Lieutenant, Charles M. Powell; Captain, A. Averill; First Lieutenant, Wm. A. Young; Second Lieutenant, Samuel H. Podger; Captain, Frank Wellington; First Lieutenant, —— Donelson; Second Lieutenant, Chas. A. Clark; Captain, W. H. Lewis; First Lieutenant, J. G. Burnett; Second Lieutenant, Joseph Costello; Captain, Henry Buck; First Lieutenant, James A. Dolan; Second Lieutenant, Richard Perry; Captain, Park E. McTyhe; First Lieutenant, —— Jacobson; Second Lieutenant, Geo. Black; Captain, Chas. T. Ripley.

PRESENTATION OF A HORSE TO COL. TURNBULL OF THE SECOND REGIMENT, METROPOLITAN GUARDS.

On Thursday evening the Police Captains of this city presented to Col. TURNBULL, of the Second Regiment of Metropolitan Guards, a splendid horse, valued at $500; also, a saddle, bridle, brace of pistols, &c. The presentation took place at the Twenty-Ninth Precinct Station-house, where Capt. DE CAMP, of the Seventh Precinct, made the presentation speech, which was very happily replied to by Col. TURNBULL. The latter officer will leave with his regiment for the seat of war either to-day or to-morrow, having received orders to march as soon as they are ready. Col. TURNBULL has been for sixteen years a member of the National Guard, (Seventh Regiment,) and for nearly the same length of time he has been connected with the Police Department of this City. He is regarded as a very competent and skillful officer, and will leave behind him a host of warm and steadfast friends.

THE MOVEMENT AMONG THE GROCERS.

The Committee appointed at the meeting of grocers, and others connected with that trade, held at the Wall-street Salesroom, on the 12th inst., to assist the Government in procuring men to serve in the army of the United States, and to obtain subscriptions of money to be applied for that purpose, met yesterday, and organized by the appointment of Mr. Jonathan Sturges, as Chairman; Mr. Wm. A. Booth, as Treasurer; Mr. Chas. E. Beebe, as Secretary.

Subscriptions to the funds may be handed to the Treasurer, or to either member of the Committee, viz.: Jonathan Sturges, R. B. Sherman, Chas. Burkhalter, Francis M. Babcock, Francis Shiddy, John J. Van Nostrand, John D. McKenzie, Wm. A. Booth, George Moller, Geo. W. Lane, Jas. K. Place, Chas. E. Beebe, J. P. March, N. Denton Smith.

A GOOD OFFICER.

The Major of the First Regiment of the Empire (SPINOLA) Brigade is JAMES R. DEL VECCHIO, a well known citizen of Brooklyn, and an honored member of the craft. He has been for many years identified with the Democracy of Brooklyn, and on several occasions has been complimented by the desirable nomination and subsequent election to a good office. He is the proprietor, publisher and editor of the Brooklyn Standard, a weekly of great literary merit, and of the staunchest Union principles.

VECCHIO, having said to a great many "Go," has dropped his pen, and now cries at the head of his column, "Come." If DEL VECCHIO makes as good a Major as he is a Mr., if he fights as well as he writes, if he manoeuvres as successfully as he manages, he will win fame for himself, do honor to the City of Churches, and be of infinite service to the cause of the Union.

THE TWENTY-SECOND MILITIA ON DUTY.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SECOND REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M., Sept. 14, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER, No. 29.—I. In conformity with special orders from Brigade Headquarters, the regiment will assemble on Tuesday, the 16th inst., at 8 o'clock A. M., in Union-square, to proceed to East New-York. Regimental line will be formed on the north side of the square, right on Broadway. Field and staff (dismounted) will report to the commanding officer, and non-commissioned staff and field music to the Adjutant, at the hour above named.

II. The uniform will be that which the regiment wore whilst in Virginia, including gaiters. Every man will come equipped in marching order, with blanket, canteen, and haversack containing one day's rations.

III. Quartermaster CHAS. T. WEITS, and Ordnance-Officer WM. B. MEEKS, will report at once at these headquarters. By order,

Lieut.-Col. LLOYD ASPINWALL.

WM. J. A. MCGRATH, Adjutant.

SPINOLA'S EMPIRE BRIGADE.

We have received assurances from Capt. J. W. BERRY, commanding Company K, of the First Regiment, (Col. JOURDAN'S,) that the reports in regard to the troubles in the camp of the Empire Brigade at East New-York have been much exaggerated. The men were yesterday as quiet and orderly as could be desired. Capt. DUNN notifies absentees from his company that they must report at the camp to-day, by 1 P. M., or be reported and treated as deserters. There will be a parade of the brigade in the afternoon.

THE BOUNTY FUND EXHAUSTED.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Sept. 13, 1862.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Be pleased to announce that the bounty fund from which payments were made by the Committee is expended.

No more bounties can be paid until voluntary contributions replenish the treasury.

CHARLES GOULD,
Treasurer of the National War Committee.

The Army of Gen. McClellan—Some from Hull.

N. P. TALLMADGE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is with extreme regret that I see so many sarcastic upon our generals in the field, from letter writers, editors and civilians. These matters had better be left to those who have charge of military matters at Washington. I have no acquaintance with any of the younger Generals of the present war. I have, therefore, no prejudices nor predilections in regard to them, and would be glad to see them left to be judged by their merits.

Gen. MCCLELLAN has been peculiarly an object of attack. I expressed a favorable opinion of him, through your columns, nearly a year ago. I have seen no reason to change it since. I believe if he had been left to follow his own judgment, Richmond would have been captured long ago. As it was, he has done the best that any man could have done. The change of the base of his operations, in front of the enemy, to the James River, is one of the most brilliant achievements in military history. The rebels gave him great credit for this, and say that no one but Gen. MCCLELLAN could have accomplished it.

His evacuation of the Peninsula was conducted in the most perfect and successful manner. I deemed the movement a mistake at the time, and freely expressed my opinion to that effect. Whether he approved, or whether he was overruled by higher authority, I know not. If he had remained, he would have kept the main body of the rebel army at Richmond, whilst Gen. PEPE could have kept at bay any force they could have sent against him; and, in due time, Gen. HALLECK could have added, of new recruits, enough to make the combined attack of the two columns perfectly overwhelming. As it is, Richmond is almost evacuated by the rebel troops, and an army of 200,000, according to the statement of Gen. ABRAHAM LINCOLN, recently from there, is now threatening Washington and Maryland. They have left a starving, and famishing, and pestilential position, to literalists on the outspread trains of our army, and to breathe the pure air of the mountains and valleys of Virginia.

The above is a common-sense view of a mere "looker-on," but in which I may be mistaken. I trust, however, if any error has been committed, that Gen. HALLECK, with his great tact and sagacity, will correct it, by pouring upon the enemy an overwhelming force that will crush the rebellion forever. He need have no hesitation in selecting Gen. MCCLELLAN to lead such an enterprise—for the military talent he has already exhibited, and possessing the entire confidence of his officers and men, is a sure guaranty that, with a competent force, victory will perch on his standard.

When I commenced writing, I intended merely to express my unchanged opinion in regard to Gen. MCCLELLAN—and, in conclusion, I now say, and I wish to put my prediction on record, that when the true history of this war shall be written, all his plans and movements will be conceded to have been conceived in wisdom and executed with judgment, and he will stand before the country as one of the greatest military minds of the age.

N. P. TALLMADGE.

FORT DELAC, WIS., Monday, Sept. 8, 1862.

The Sixth Massachusetts in Baltimore.

The Baltimore Clipper of Friday gives the following account of the reception of the Massachusetts Sixth in that city on Thursday:

"It being announced in the morning papers that the Sixth Massachusetts regiment would certainly arrive here yesterday morning, our citizens assembled in great numbers at the depot of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company to give them a cordial reception. The morning hours passed on and the crowd increased, still the regiment did not make its appearance. It was finally ascertained that they would not arrive before the afternoon, and the crowd dispersed.

Early in the afternoon they reassembled in force, and waited until sunset and dark before the regiment arrived. When they did reach the depôt, such an excitement we never before witnessed. Cheer after cheer rent the air, which continued after the regiment had formed into line, all along the route of march to the Camden Station.

Crowds also lined the sidewalks, and ladies filled the windows along the route, extending to the "Old Sixth" a hearty welcome back to the Monumental City.

In the regiment were many familiar faces. Among others was Capt. DYER, who was severely wounded on the 19th of April, and remained in the city some time after the regiment left. He was warmly greeted by many personal friends. The ranks were somewhat fuller than when in April, 1861, it pressed forward to save the Capital of the nation. There are nine companies in the command, as at present organized, numbering 930 men; five from Lowell; one from Lawrence; one each from Acton and Groton, and another company recruited from the small towns in the vicinity of Lowell. The fame evidently bearing of the men was everywhere remarked along the route. They seemed to feel proud of the reputation of the regiment and determined to sustain it. The Sixth will do good service in the battles to come."

THEOLOGICAL VOLUNTEERS.—The students of Princeton Theological Seminary have resolved to drill for military service if occasion for it should arise. They have elected H. H. WHITE of Pennsylvania captain. Dr. MOFFATT, Professor of Church History, declares himself ready to lead them if need be. He has a son already in the Ninth Regiment N. Y. Volunteers. In Princeton College one or two companies have already been formed.

General Butler has issued the following general order respecting this engagement:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, SEPTEMBER, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER No. 86.—The Commanding General has carefully revised the official reports of the action of August 5, at Baton Rouge, to collect the evidence of the gallant deeds and meritorious services of those engaged in that brilliant victory.

The name of the lamented and gallant Gen. Williams has already gathered new victory.

Col. Roberts, of the Seventh Vermont Volunteers, fell while fearlessly leading, while rallying his men. He was worthy of a better disciplined regiment and a better fate.

Glorious and fitting to die for one's country, yet his regiment gave him the inexpressible pain of seeing it greatly outnumbered in the hand to hand struggle by the enemy, and refuse to march to the aid of the outnumbered and dynamited Indianians.

The Seventh Vermont Regiment, by a fatal mistake, and already fired into the same regiment they had refused to support, killing and wounding several.

The Commanding General therefore excepts the Seventh Vermont from General Order No. 57, and will not, with such colors, be inscribed with a name which could bring to its officers and men no great delight.

It is further ordered, that the colors of that regiment be not borne by them until such time as they shall have earned the right to them, and the earliest opportunity will be given this regiment to show whether they be worthy descendants of those who fought beside Allen, and with Stark at Bennington.

The men of the Ninth Connecticut, who were detached to man Nims' Battery, deserve special commendation.

The Fourteenth Maine Volunteers have credit for their gallant conduct throughout the day.

Col. Nicholls deserves well of his country, not more for his daring and cool courage displayed on the field of battle, than for the assurance he brings, that his men in such a state of discipline as to enable them to execute most difficult manœuvres under fire with coolness and efficiency. His regiment behaved admirably.

Nims' Battery, Second Massachusetts, under command of Lieut. Trull, its Captain being confined by sickness; Evanson's Battery, Sixth Massachusetts, under command of Lieut. Cushing; Manning's Battery, Fourth Massachusetts; and a section of a battery taken by the Twenty-first Indiana from the mutinous Nineteenth Indiana, served under command of Lieut. Sidney Cox, are honorably mentioned for the efficiency and skill with which they were served. The loops of dead and dying within their range attested the fatal accuracy of their fire.

The Sixth Michigan fought rather by detachments than as a regiment, but deserves the fullest commendation for the manliness behavior of its officers and men. Companies A, B and F, under command of Capt. Osmun, receive special mention for the coolness and courage with which they supported and relieved Roemer's Battery, resting in the Fourth Louisiana and western cotton-press, after the regiment had leave to rest in the native State.

Col. Dudley, of the Twenty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, has earned for his regiment of the right wing under his command. The Thirteenth Massachusetts was promptly brought into position by Major Wentworth, and held its position with steadiness and success.

To the Twenty-first Indiana a high need of praise is awarded. "Honor to whom honor is due." Deprived of the services of their brave Colonel, suffering under wounds previously received, who essayed twice to join his regiment in the fight, but fell from his horse from weakness; with every field officer wounded and borne from the field; its Adjutant, the gallant Lieut. Allen, killed; seeing their General fall, with his wounds on his breast, they exclaimed, "In situation! pass field officers are all killed—I will lead you," and, this brave corps fought on without a thought of defeat. Lieut.-Col. Lazzo was everywhere, cheering on his men and directing their movements, and even after his very severe wound, gave them advice and assistance. Major Hayes, while sustaining the very charge of the enemy, wounded early in the action, showed himself worthy of his regiment.

The Ninth Connecticut and Fourth Wisconsin regiments being posted in reserve were not brought into action, but held their position. Col. T. W. Cahill, with the Connecticut regiment, commanded decorum by the death of the lamented Williams, prosecuted the engagement in its ultimate glorious success, and made all proper dispositions for a further attack.

Mason's Cavalry (Massachusetts) by their unwearied exertions on picket duty, contributed largely to our success, and deserve favorable mention.

The patriotic courage of the following officers and privates, who left the hospital to fight, is especially commended:

Capt. C. C. Wain, Co. A, Capt. Eugene Kelly, Co. I, First Lieut. G. A. R. Dimon, Adjutant and Second Lieut. Fred. M. Northrop, Co. G, 30th Massachusetts; Third Lieut. Tilly, 4th Massachusetts battery; Sergt. Chase, 9th Connecticut.

The following have honorable mention:

Lieut. H. H. Elliot, A. A. A. General to Gen. Williams, for his coolness and intrepidity in action and his performance with which he fulfilled his duties; Lieut. Jos. Tweedale, Quartermaster of Thirteenth Massachusetts, who fell severely wounded while acting Aid to Gen. Williams; Lieut. W. G. Howe, of Co. A, Thirteenth Massachusetts, acting Aid to Col. Dudley, dangerously wounded in five places before he quit the field; Lieut. C. A. R. Dimon, Adjutant Thirteenth Massachusetts, acting Aid to Col. Dudley, behaved most gallantly; Lieut. Fred. M. Northrop, Thirteenth Massachusetts, acting Aid to Col. Dudley, for daring courage in the field; Alfred T. Holt, Assistant Surgeon Thirteenth Massachusetts, for humane courage, taking on his back, under a hot fire, the wounded soldiers as they fell.

Lieut. G. G. Swanson, Thirteenth Massachusetts, gallantly dashing into the smoke of the enemy's musketry, brought off a caisson left by Manning's Battery. The gallant officer and admirable soldier, Capt. Eugene Kelly, of Company I, Thirteenth Massachusetts, who was detailed to display his brave and native company on the extreme right, endeavored performance of that duty fell bravely at their head. Lieut. W. H. Clapp, Company K, Thirteenth Massachusetts, who fell, wounded severely, but endeavored not to be taken from the field until the battle should be ended. Color-Sergt. Brooks, Company C, Thirteenth Massachusetts, and Color-Corporal Bryant, Company K, Thirteenth Massachusetts, who lost his left arm. Both behaved admirably during the entire engagement.

Private Wilkins, Company E, Thirteenth Massachusetts, who, though wounded with the bullet still in his body, remained on duty throughout the engagement. Sergt. Tomlinson, of Company E, First Sergt. John Haley, Company E, Thirteenth Massachusetts, commanded Company E bravely and well, in the necessary absence of his line officers. Capt. James Gardner, Company B, Twenty-first Indiana, who commanded the regiment after Col. Lazzo was wounded, for his gallant behavior in following up the battle to its complete success. Adjutant Maxwell A. Lathrop, Twenty-first Indiana, instantly killed, while in the act of waving his sword and urging on the men to deeds of valor.

Lieut. Charles B. Seeley, Orderly-Sergeant John A. Bourneson, Corporal Isaac Kelsey, and private Henry Tomlinson, of Company A, Twenty-first Indiana, who were killed instantly, while bravely contending on the ground with the enemy. Capt. Nemayer, Twenty-first Indiana, detailing men from his company to assist in working the guns in the Sixth Massachusetts Battery, after the gunners were disabled, for his supporting Lieut. Cassarus and battery. Lieut. Brown, of the Twenty-first Indiana, commanding a battery, improvised from his regiment, for the efficient manner in which he handled the guns. He deserves promotion to a battery.

Capt. Charles Cotter, Sergeant-Major Colonel, Sixth Michigan Regiment, pursued the enemy from flashing one single bringing gun commanded at the critical moment to the support of Nims' Battery. Lieut. Howell, Company F, Sixth Michigan, and Lieut. A. T. Ralph, Acting Adjutant, for intrepidity. Capt. Spencer, Sixth Michigan, in command of the company of pickets, who handsomely held in check the enemy's advance. The fearless conduct of Lieut. Howell, Company F, Sixth Michigan, Company A, Sixth Michigan Regiment, who, when they were wounded, in supporting Lieut. Bryant's battery.

Capt. Soule and Lieut. Cutler, Company I, Sixth Michigan, as skirmishers, were wounded, deserve special notice for the steadiness of their movement, which lost heavily in killed and wounded. Major Dickinson and Adjutant J. H. Metcalfe, of the Fourteenth Maine, wounded while bodly discharging their duty. Capt. Stevens, Company H, Fourteenth Maine, who was wounded while leading on his men at the head of the front charge of the battle. It is sorrowful, indeed, to add that by the accident to the steamer Whitney, the wounded of the Fourth Louisiana, Second Sergeant J. N. Seavy, Company C; Corporal Edmund, Company D; Private Trible, Company F; Second Sergeant Snow, Company D; Private A. Blackwell, Company F—all of the Fourteenth Maine, and are commended for rare bravery.

Acting Ordnance Sergeant Long; Quartermaster Sergeant Gardner, Company C, Sergeant Jackman, all of the Fourteenth Maine, and all whom mentioned, gave the rebels the ranks at the commencement of the action.

Capt. Charles H. Manning, Fourth Massachusetts Battery, who fought his battery admirably, and established his reputation as a gallant commander. John Donahoe, Fourth Massachusetts Battery, who brought off from the clutch of the Seventh Vermont Regiment their colors at the time of their retreat. Private John R. Dupree, Fourth Massachusetts Battery; private Ralph O. Rochon, of Mann's Cavalry, who together went into the fight, formed horses into a battery wagon of the Sixth Massachusetts Battery, and brought it off under the fire of the enemy. Lieut. Allen, who had two horses shot under him; Lieut. Frank Bryant, Orderly Sergeant Bacon, Sergeant Wagonna, Corporal Wood, and Private Gardner Andrews, all of the Sixth Massachusetts Battery, for conspicuous bravery, efficiency and good conduct.

Sergt. Cummer and privates Tyler, Spilling and Glossom, of the Ninth Connecticut, for the skill and bravery with which they worked one of the guns of Nims' battery. Capt. Cole, Lieut. Lyman, of Company H, Ninth Connecticut, who, earlier in the occurrence on the morning of the 5th, during which he formed and secured three of the enemy's cannon, filled with ammunition. By Order of

THE NEW-ORLEANS BANKS.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, NEW-ORLEANS, AUG. 23, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER No. 96.—The Commercial Bank and Crescent City Bank having, by their own showing, not such cash assets as under the laws of Louisiana would entitle them to continue to be banks of issue and deposit, are hereby ordered to go into liquidation, and to suspend all business save the collecting of their own assets. The several Boards of Directors are respectively made a Board of Trustees, to wind up the affairs of the Bank. They will issue no bills, pay no dividends, contract no new obligations, nor extend any obligation without a full equivalent in behalf of the Bank, and pay no debts without further orders.

They will respectively make report, under oath of a majority of the Board, weekly of the exact condition of the Bank, and the changes from each report.

The Directors will send to these headquarters a written acceptance of the trust.

In order that the public may be assured in their confidence in the final redemption of the liabilities of the Bank, it is further ordered that the slightest breach of good faith in the officers of the Bank, or in winding up the affairs of the Bank, will be summarily and exemplarily punished.

The United States and all bill holders will be preferred creditors, entitled to be first paid from the assets.

The bills of the Merchant and Crescent City Banks are no longer to be regarded as currency.

By command of

Maj.-Gen. BUTLER, Commanding.

FROM ROSECRANS' DIVISION.

The Ohio Brigade—Hot Weather and the Buckeyes—Army Printing Offices, &c.

The following letter from the special correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, dated the 8th inst.—the day after the one on which Rosecrans was reported to have attacked the rebels at Tupelo, Miss., and met with repulse—sets the story at rest:

IUKA, Miss., Sept. 6, 1862.

When that wise and illustrious patriarch, King Solomon, said that there was "nothing new under the sun," he must have particularly referred to the particular sun which reigns here at present, and does not allow any other sun to interfere with his authority; for how anything new, or even old, can exist under the rays of the sun which is now nightly making its daily sorties on our devoted Buckeye heads, is a mystery to us.

At present Old "Sol" is the only enemy we have to contend against in this immediate vicinity. Our plan of operations can only be properly carried out by "masterly inactivity," or by "changing our base of operations," by which, unlike our distinguished Potomac strategist, we are able to outgeneral our foe. It is true that it requires considerable foresight, calculation and perseverance to determine the most advantageous ground whereon to "concentrate;" but, having a superabundance of any of those qualities our task is far from difficult, and at length we are impressed with the belief that, to successfully terminate this war, "Little Mac" should call "us—We, Us & Co.—to his assistance, for we really believe we could learn him a thing or two.

If I except the inconveniences which the heat out here puts us to, I think I fully express the feelings of our "Buckeye" boys when I declare that we are having "good times." It is true, duty is rather heavy on us, but then what true American will refuse to do his duty? Echo replies, "who?" Camp guards having been to a certain extent abolished in our brigade, the boys do not find much difficulty in getting around, and, in truth, a stranger visiting this place would be apt to question whether we were encamped in the town or where we really are—some miles outside. Being imbued with something of a Yankee nature, they are of an inquisitive turn of mind, and like to be at all times "around," to see what is going on. Free access to the town not being denied them, thanks to our present provost guard, they have every facility for satisfying themselves upon any desired point. Our present Provost-Marshal is Capt. Sabry F. Tuttson, of the 42d Ohio, under whose control the town remains quiet and orderly. He is aided by an efficient guard, detailed alternately, each week, from the different regiments encamped here. It is almost unnecessary to state that Capt. Tuttson has his hands full. His office is constantly beleaguered by the citizens for passes, permits to purchase, &c., and each one is civilly attended to. Capt. T. hates "secesh" worse than the devil hates holy water, and unless the applicants for favors prove themselves to be staunch Union men, they might as well save their shoe-leather in walking to his office, for he is one of those strict expounders of military law who deem that the sympathizers of the enemy are not entitled to any favor or accommodation whatsoever, and by his hands they are not apt to receive any.

The people hereabouts are becoming day by day more reconciled in our occupation of their country, instead of the sneer and frown with which they at one time welcomed (?) Federal uniforms. They can now pass us on the streets with an occasional bow or smile. Their houses are nightly visited by our officers; and an hour or two is very socially and pleasantly passed away in conversation; the ladies are inclined to be affable and courteous, which renders a visit still more pleasant. It is true that there are two or three families here wherein the gentle sex remind their visitors of their continued sympathy for the rebellion, but still they do not render themselves as obnoxious as the women in the neighborhood of Danville and Corinth. At the latter places, the snuff-chewing, whizzen-faced specimens of petticoat government, would not be content with an expression of their sentiments, but must constantly thrust into our ears all the hopes and wishes they entertained in favor of the success of the Union and confusion of our armies, until it became quite a trial to our patience, and we felt only too thankful when we could take our leave of them. The Bonnie Blue Flag, during an evening's entertainment, is about all that reminds us that we are in company with women, whose fathers, brothers or husbands are enlisted in the rebel ranks, and whose sympathies are with the Southern cause. The men either remain entirely neutral, or profess Unionism; most of them have taken the oath of allegiance, and are allowed certain privileges, which are more apt to incline them favorably toward us than an opposite course could possibly do. By the vigorous action of our military authorities several of the residents of this place, who have been giving information of our movements to the enemy, have been apprehended, and put where so much freedom of action is not tolerated. For the past day or two the sale of daily papers to citizens has been suppressed also for obvious reasons.

Our friends at home will be somewhat surprised when I inform them that out here in this land of oak and pine we have such a metropolitan affair as a printing office. Such, however, is the case. Connected with Gen. Rosecrans' headquarters is an "Army Printing Office," and one which bids fair to become quite an "institution" among us. It is conducted by Corp. Wm. E. Moore, of Cincinnati, formerly of Company B, Twenty-seventh Ohio. The several specimens of workmanship emanating from his office which I have seen speak well for the taste and ability of Corp. Moore. He has only a hand-press and two cases of type, but nevertheless many of the "orders," "reports," etc., executed by him, would do justice to any of our city offices. Corp. M. was, previous to the war, connected for a long time with the establishment of Moore, Wilstach, Keys & Co., of your city, and is a young man who "understands his biz." A better selection could not, therefore, have been made for the position he occupies.

I have been requested to state, for the information of our friends, that the Ohio regiment here at present commanded as follows: Twenty-seventh Ohio, Maj. L. S. Spaulding; Twenty-ninth, Col. A. W. Gilmore; Forty-third, Lieut.-Col. Swayne; Sixty-third, Col. J. W. Sprague.

I would call the attention of our Commissariat to the necessity of furnishing us with plenty of vegetables, particularly with onions and potatoes. The latter anti-scorbutics are more essential than the balance of the rations together, especially in this climate. In connection with this matter, I would state that somehow the supply of ice sent to this point is totally inadequate. Therefore, to our sanitary commissions, and friends generally, I would say, send us on immediately three things: ice, anti-scorbutics and recruits. Each one is essential to the other, and all are needed.

LAW REPORTS.

The Troubles of a Youthful and Newly-Married Couple—Alimony.

SUPERIOR COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice White.

Mary Flynn vs. William Flynn.—The plaintiff is a young woman, (about fifty years of age,) a tailoress by trade, and the defendant is an aged person, said to be between 60 and 70, with no business. The two were married on the 4th day of December, 1861, and shortly after, plaintiff alleges, the defendant deserted and abandoned her, on account of which the plaintiff brought an action for a separation forever from bed and board, and for an allowance of $500 a year for her support and maintenance.

She now moved for an allowance pendente lite, to support her and to enable her to prosecute the action; and made affidavits going to show that false and fraudulent representations were made by defendant that he had real property in Twenty-seventh street, valued at $10,000; that he now has property, and also, that he was guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment, which, however, the Court ruled out as improper on this motion.

The application is resisted by the defendant, on affidavits, that he has never abandoned the plaintiff, and that he has no property except an annuity of $600 allowed him by his son-in-law, John Kelly, but that the plaintiff has property sufficient to support herself; and that he was fraudulently induced to marry the plaintiff, who, told him she was doing a good business, and could support herself if he could not. The wife, however, insisted on having a favorite piece live with them, which defendant could not put up with, and Mrs. Flynn thereupon requested her husband "to clear out." The defendant swears that he is 66 years of age, has the consumption, and is unable to do any work toward the support of a family.

Defendant's counsel insisted that no alimony should be allowed, on the grounds—first, that alimony is not allowed as of course in a suit for a separation, (1 Barb. 64; 1 Id., 630; 2 Edwards' Ch., 397). Second, if the wife has property, alimony is not allowed. (Id. 140; 1 Id. 630; 2 Edwards' Ch., 397). Third, if the husband is poor, and the wife is able to support the defendant, alimony is not allowed. (2 Barb. 64).

After hearing argument, the Court decided to deny the motion.

O. A. Hoard for motion; A. R. Dyett opposed.

Proceedings in Arrest—What is a Sufficient Prima Facie Case of Fraud.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Judge Sutherland.

Joseph L. Porter vs. Daniel L. Sullivan.—This was a motion to vacate an order of arrest, on the ground that the affidavit upon which it was granted related to matters only on information and belief.

The affidavit in the case upon which the order of arrest was granted, set out that the defendant agreed to pay the claim, which was for work and labor, when the work was done; that at the time that the work was done the defendant was carrying on a business at the corner of Grand and Mangin-streets, and had leased another store at No. 179 South-street, which was opened about the 24th of May last; that upon calling for his money on that day, the 24th of May, (and on which day the defendant promised to pay it,) the plaintiff was told to come on the 27th and he should have his money; that upon calling on the 27th, other persons than the defendant were found in possession of both the stores, and the plaintiff saw the bill of sale of the South-street store, executed by the defendant the day previous; that diligent search was afterward made for the defendant but he could not be found. These facts were sworn to positively. The facts sworn to on information and belief were, that the persons in charge of the store on the 26th told the plaintiff that the defendant sold the stores on the 26th, and that the purchaser of the South-street store stated that he had paid $900 to the defendant for the store, &c.

The Court held upon such facts he had no difficulty in determining that a prima facie case of fraudulent intent had been made out sufficient to put the defendant to proof to remove the belief of design on his part to convert his property into cash, and with it to elude his creditors.

The motion to vacate was denied, with $7 costs, without prejudice to a renewal on additional affidavits.

SATURDAY, Sept. 12—P. M.

The Stock Market to-day more than recovered the temporary decline of yesterday, and before the close of the dealings, the prices on the Railway Shares were quite strong, and on New-York Centrals and the Eries decidedly buoyant. The speculative turn in Erie Preference Stock is one of the leading features of the market, and as much as 1¼ ▼ cent. was paid, as against 69¼@¾ yesterday. The old Stock also improved to 39 ▼ cent. The Western Roads were firm, and ¼@¾ ▼ cent. better than on Friday. The bidding for the Railroad Bonds were advanced 1@1¼ ▼ cent, and the Federal Securities ¼@¾ ▼ cent. The price of Gold fell off to 118¾ ▼ cent. The United States Notes, Custom-House issue, were in renewed demand, and the supply on the Street by no means free, so that the price ultimately rose to 110 ▼ cent. Late in the afternoon the general market fell off about as follows; the speculation in the Railroads upward:

THE CONSTRUCTION OF FORTIFICATIONS.

Arrival of Reinforcements from Gen. Rosecrans' Army.

Fifteen or Twenty Thousand Troops Sent to the Relief of Cincinnati.

PITTSBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The Press of this city has received the following dispatch:

[illegible], Tenn., Friday, Sept. 5—6 o'clock P.M.

The whole of Gen. Buell's army is hastening to the support of this city, which is now threatened by Gen. Bragg, who drives our rear-guard at a respectful distance.

The city is being fortified.

Gen. Thomas will be placed in command, with orders to defend the city at all hazards.

Before this reaches you the fate of Nashville will doubtless have been decided.

The advance, composed of the Twenty-sixth Penn., [illegible], Twenty-fourth Illinois, First Wisconsin, and [illegible] Kentucky, accompanied by two batteries, left here to render its respects to Gen. Bragg [illegible] year.

[illegible] under Gen. Bragg will leave tonight for the same destination.

Eight thousand men from the army of Gen. Rosecrans, under command of Gen. Jefferson C. Davis, have arrived here to-day for the purpose of reinforcing Gen. Buell.

Major Fox is in town to-day, a refugee from Columbia.

[illegible] Pa is being fortified.

Gen. Bragg will not delay in engaging.

The Nashvillians are very bold, the Unionists trusted and undaunted.

IMPORTANT FROM CINCINNATI.

The Rebel Army Retreating in Confusion.

The Ohio Militia Going Home.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The rebel army has fallen back beyond Florence.

Some prisoners taken by our scouts say they had 18,000 men, while others say that only 10,000 advanced on this side of Florence, under Gen. Bragg.

The prisoners say the raid of the rebels was made because they had heard of Gen. Bragg's presence in Kentucky, and had not heard from Gen. Bragg.

Our latest report last night says that the rebels are retreating in confusion.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, Sept. 13.

Gov. Tod has ordered home the militia sent here for the defence of the border. The Cincinnati troops returned to the city this afternoon, their services being no longer required in Kentucky—the Unionists of regular troops there being sufficient for any emergency. The streets are thronged with people to welcome them home.

The rebels are reported at Alton, twenty miles South.

It is reported to-night that Charleston, Va., has been evacuated and burned by our troops, who are falling toward the Ohio.

LATEST FROM LOUISVILLE

LOUISVILLE, Saturday, Sept. 13.

A gentleman from Frankfort arrived here to-day. He says there is a rebel cavalry force there, 150 strong. Several the troops have removed some distance from town.

Reliable information received says that Bragg is now at Tompkinsville.

Two deserters from Buckner's army say that Buckner was at Sparta, Tenn., Sunday last, with 10,000 men. He was expecting to invade Kentucky.

Capt. Morgan, who has returned to Lagrange from a scouting expedition, reports 800 cavalry at Newcastle. They captured the telegraph operator at Eminence, and threatened to hang him unless he gave up his instrument.

THE NATIONAL ARMY IN KENTUCKY.—GEN. NEAL. LEW. WALLACE.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CAMP WITH-AWARD, CAMPBELL COUNTY, KY., Wednesday, September 10, 1862.

Cincinnati is now the rival of Washington in point of military interest—the rebels having selected it as the first point of attack in their effort to carry the war out of Africa. Having exhausted every means of subsistence in their own land, they look with longing eyes upon the rich granaries and plethoric coffers of the Northwest. The Queen City, like the land of Canaan, is even now overflowing with milk and honey; its warehouses are crammed with all manner of subsistence, and its army depots contain vast supplies of munitions of war, clothing, and indeed of everything needed to equip and subsist an army, and its banks contain millions of ready money, all of which things the rebels covet and long to possess, regardless of the requirements of the Ninth Commandment. No sooner was the design of the rebels discovered, than the whole city shouldered all their military resources and devoted themselves to the business of war. The defences which have sprung up on the Kentucky side, as if by magic, are of the most formidable character. Indeed, I feel very glad I cannot send you a portfolio description thereof, as an evidence of the energy of the Buckeyeness and an example to all other cities. I do not believe that Kirby Smith will face the intrenchments, nor do I think that he will attempt to reach Cincinnati by any direct route, but rather seek to cross the Ohio and feed his army the country in the rear of the city. That the country between Covington and Lexington abounds with guerrillas we all believe, but they do not venture near to succeed to the front of rebels, and then only in very small parties. Our pickets get scared almost every night, and we are kept as sleepless as any widow-maids can desire. Most of the troops here are utterly without transportation, ambulances, and many other military necessities. They have been hurried from the recruiting offices almost sans culottes. Many of the regiments are inadequate, having no more than six or seven companies. Their arms are mostly Austrian rifles. We have plenty of artillery, including [illegible] of which, in the present emergency, cannot be comprehended by "your correspondent." The army is rapidly acquiring discipline. The Eighty-third Regiment has a Point Guard, to so many (very difficult matter at first) [illegible]

[illegible] Thus the rebels have [illegible] to fly before the Buckeyes. Thus the rebels have [illegible] If they can to outflank our position, they will pass by Short Hills Junction, and we will not be outflanked. One thing is certain, Kirby Smith's army was badly educated when it entered the Blue Grass region, and that his present results will mitigate against the physical condition of his forces. He is also retarding rapidly, for "Blue Grass" has never been tempting. At best, it was like the Apostolic Church of Laodicea, lukewarm, neither hot nor cold, falling fair leaves and mains to the Union, and praying for the rebels at the same time. I wrote you in November that good policy required the vigorous prosecution of the Cumberland Gap expedition, and I am now convinced that 10,000 men could then have done more toward the defence of the Northwest than 30,000 can now do. Had the army under Gen. Sumner advanced, instead of making that disastrous retreat, the Northwest would have been saved from the invasion, and more done toward crushing the rebellion than has yet been accomplished by any one expedition. Red tape and "something worse" prevailed over sound discretion; the army retreated, and was disgraced in the eyes of the whole nation—a misconduct that has never yet been satisfactorily explained. But with all the encouragement that surrounded this army, we have much that is unfavorable. It will hardly be credited that we are absolutely suffering for water. The regiment in which "Young Truly" is quartered, cannot obtain any water fit to drink, and none at all for washing. I never saw the demoralizing effect of a dirty shirt so vividly as I do now.

LODER.

REPORTS FROM CAIRO.

The following is a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune:

CAIRO, Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1862.

Gen. Stanley's Division commenced moving yesterday, destination unknown. In fact, it is reasonable to suppose it will not go far.

Thirteen refugees from Fayette County, Ala., arrived last evening. They left about ten days since, and by traveling nights and lying by in the day time, they succeeded, after much tribulation, in reaching the Federal lines, where they took the oath of allegiance and received a passport for Cairo. They say the conscription act is clearing the country of men between the ages of fifteen and forty-five, and that immense numbers are being sent to the Confederate army.

The Confederate prisoners from Chicago left for Vicksburgh this evening, escorted by a ram and 4 gunboats.

A soldier, returned from Corinth to-day, reports that the railroad between that place and Iuka is in the possession of the rebels.

There was a little skirmish at Horn Lake, Miss., yesterday. Federal cavalry pickets were fired on while taking breakfast. A Lieutenant ahead of his men was killed. The Confederates scattered.

On Thursday, the steamer White Cloud, down the river from Helena for cotton, was fired upon, three miles below the city, by guerrillas. No damage done.

The steamer Pinout, up from below, says that when at Commerce they were informed that the people of that neighborhood were in about all guerrillas coming down for the week. They don't like to have their plantations laid waste and houses burned.

The fleet is still at Helena. The Keokuck is ashore, but will be got off. It is said one hundred negroes have been shot between here and Hernando, in compliance with Gen. Price's order, for insubordination.

Texas troops are concentrating at Little Rock. They have arms and powder manufacturing at San Antonio.

The Vicksburgh Whig, of the 2d, says the Brazil and a Federal transport arrived opposite Natchez on the 1st. The citizens of Natchez were preparing to give them a warm reception, if they landed on the Mississippi side.

Twelve hundred exchanged prisoners arrived at Vicksburgh on the 1st inst.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal, of the 26th, says a schooner with a cargo of salt from Nassau, while attempting to run the blockade, was captured by our cruisers.

The Memphis Appeal office was closed on Saturday for the publication of an article entitled, "Bull Run the Second."

THE BATTLE OF BRITTON'S LANE.

Five Hundred of the Twentieth and Thirtieth Illinois Defeat Five Thousand Rebels.

Rebel Loss, 179 Killed and Between 300 and 400 Wounded—National Loss, 4 Killed, 32 Wounded and 77 Prisoners.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

JACKSON, TENN., Friday, Sept. 5.

Your readers have been informed by telegraph of the recent raids of numerous forces of rebel guerrillas along our whole line at different points, of their repulse, and of a skirmish having occurred between a large force of rebel cavalry and the forces under Col. Dunne, consisting of the Twentieth and Thirtieth Illinois Infantry, a battery of artillery, and one company of cavalry, in which the rebels were driven back; but this does not tell the tale, but leaves an impression that it was but an ordinary affair. Instead of its being a skirmish, it was one of the fiercest and most brilliant little battles yet recorded in this fearful struggle for constitutional liberty.

This fight took place at a place known as Britton's Lane, near Swazzer's school-house, twelve miles southwest from Jackson, and four miles south of the village of Denmark.

THE APPROACH AND PREPARATIONS FOR ATTACK.

Col. Dunne' command, which consisted of the remains of the Thirtieth Illinois Infantry, commanded by Major Sanger, and Twentieth Illinois Infantry, commanded by Capt. Farrar; portions of two companies of the Ohio Cavalry, commanded by Capt. Foster, and two pieces of Sweazer's Battery, 6-pounders, Jaeger rifle,—were stationed at Estanaula Ferry, twenty miles from Jackson, on the Hatchie River, to guard the ford or crossing. Expecting that they would be attacked by a large force of the enemy, on Sunday morning last, Col. Lawler ordered the force to fall back on Jackson. Col. Dunne immediately took up a line of march, and reached a point four miles east of Denmark by evening, where his troops rested for a short time. Here orders were received to countermarch to Medon Station and Denmark on the Clover Creek road. They at once renewed their march, and went as far as Denmark, and lay on their arms, on the western outskirts of the town, over night.

Next morning, at daylight, they again resumed their line of march on the Clover Creek Road, in the following order of march: Foster's Cavalry, advance guard; Twentieth Illinois Infantry, in advance of artillery and baggage and provision train; and Thirtieth Illinois Infantry in the rear. After this march was taken up, another order was received to advance to Clover Creek and endeavor to intercept and cut of a large force of rebel cavalry which had been engaging our troops at Medon Station early that morning, and was then retreating toward Clover Creek. By some misunderstanding of their guide, the wrong road was taken, which led through the woods to Britton's Lane. The train had become somewhat scattered by this time, so the advance halted in a hollow half a mile from the lane, until the train came up.

THE BATTLE.

Foster's Cavalry, which reconnoitered the advance, entered the lane about 10 o'clock A. M., and discovered the enemy's skirmishers posted in the woods, left of the road, and immediately engaged them, and held their position until the Twentieth came up, a few minutes afterwards. Col. Dunne ordered the artillery to be posted in the road, so as to command the lane, and the Twentieth Regiment to support it; whereupon a line of battle was formed in the timber to the right of the road, occupying a favorable ridge.

The artillery was no sooner posted than they began to play upon the enemy, or in the direction indicated by the rebel yell.

After our line of battle was formed, Capt. Foster, with his cavalry, advanced to discover the position of the enemy, but they had gone but a short distance before they were met and driven back. At the same time, who advanced on a desperate charge, four deep and three thousand strong, and as was afterwards learned, with the expectation of taking our camp. They had sent out large detachments to encompass and lay for the purpose of picking up all straggler, and thus begging the whole command. Though they came yearling up the road and through the fields, discharging volley after volley, not a shot was fired from our men till they had come up in full view, at about one hundred yards distance, and had nearly all discharged their pieces, which fortunately overshot our men, when our men were ordered to "fire," and poured into the rebel ranks such a deadly fire that their advance was temporarily checked. About one hundred saddles were emptied, and the rebels fell back in dismay and disorder. They however, soon rallied again, and a second and more determined charge was made on our whole line, advancing on our flank with stronger force than before. A similar reception to the first was given by them by our boys, but they came knowingly and better prepared than at first on both our flanks. A desperate hand-to-hand encounter ensued. The rebels pushed [illegible]

[illegible] Cumberland River, and the rebels were driven back. Thus the rebels have failed in their attempt to cut off our supplies, and have left the country in disorder. Our loss was very small, not exceeding 300 killed and wounded. The rebel loss was much greater, and could not be ascertained, as they had taken their dead and wounded with them. Our cavalry pursued the rebels for some distance, and captured a number of them, who were found lying behind every fence, and some of them who were wounded were found in the woods, concealed, all fighting to the last. Among the dead was one of the rebel officers, who, when shot, was cheering his men on to the charge. The rebels were commanded by a Major General Cheatham, who commanded in person, and conducted the attack on his side, and endeavored thus to encourage his men. But the hero was too soon for him, for the words had no sooner passed from his lips than the gallant Captain of the Twentieth shot him dead from of his horse.

The rebels succeeded, in this charge, in capturing our camps and most of our transportation train; but the guns had been abandoned a short time before, and all the ammunition destroyed, so that they could not use them against us.

It was in the heat of this desperate conflict that the Thirtieth Regiment, which was over a mile and a half distant to the rear at the commencement of the fight,) led by the gallant Maj. Sanger, came rushing up in a double quick, with such a yell as only the confident can give. Then came the tug of war. Those two exemplary regiments, which have fought together on every hard-fought field from Fredricktown to the last skirmish before Corinth, were again side by side, each vying with the other in deeds of daring, but neither fearing to excel. This encounter lasted about half an hour, when the rebels were again repulsed and fell back, without having broken our lines, to renew a position on the flanks.

In this charge the enemy had fully discovered our position, and Col. Dunne, having ridden out to the advance, discovered that the rebels were dismounting for a demonstration on foot. Under these circumstances it was deemed advisable to change position to prevent our right wing from being turned. Capt. Farrar accordingly moved his regiment to the right, with his right flank drawn back, so as to form a crescent or horse-shoe, with his right resting down a slope in the timber, leaving a gap at the point last occupied, to be protected by the Thirtieth Regiment, which was a little to the left of the corn-field. Skirmishers were also thrown out from the Thirtieth into the cornfield to the left, so as to make it appear that they were the advance of another regiment.

These precautions were taken to enable the men to hold their fire until the enemy came to within short musket range, which was religiously complied with, and for each man to take cover behind a tree whenever it was convenient.

But a short time elapsed before another charge was made by the rebels, mounted and on foot. As was anticipated, the main body of the enemy moved on the position last held by our men, and, owing to the dense cloud of dust continually arising, were unable to discover the change that had taken place, so they opened a fierce fire on the ground before occupied, killing and wounding nobody, while our boys poured in a cross-fire upon them, and, as they advanced along the line, dropped the rebels from their horses like leaves falling in an Autumn wind.

The main body of the rebels were, as before, driven back, but they succeeded in gaining a little knoll on our right, which gave them considerable advantage. Capt. Farrar saw at once that it would not do to suffer them to hold this position, so he called out for volunteers to follow him and drive the rebels from the hill. The response was a noble one. The men of the Twentieth nearly all rushed forward, led by the gallant Captain, and, with a yell, opened fire on the enemy and advanced upon their position, from which the rebels fled like frightened sheep. While this was going on on the right, the Thirtieth, on the left, were receiving another charge from overwhelming numbers, which was met like the former ones. Three other charges were made subsequently, but all to no purpose, and after four hours of the most desperate fighting on record, a Union force of not more than five hundred men succeeded in defeating and driving from the field a rebel force of from four to five thousand, leaving one hundred and seventy-nine dead rebels on the field by actual count. The number of their wounded is not known, but the proportionate number would be from three to four hundred, many of whom have since died. Capt. Cameron, who subsequently scouted the country in the vicinity of the engagement, in search of the rebel wounded, reports that they are to be found in every house from five miles this side of the battle-ground to the Hatchie river; but their wounds are of such a dangerous character that they were unit to be removed. Out of the whole number wounded two-thirds will either die or be crippled for life; by which fact your readers will see that, for the force engaged on the side of the rebels, this has been one of the most destructive and disastrous engagements of the war.

The loss of rebel officers was immense. Col. Adams was found lying dead in the fort. Four Captains and several Lieutenants now lie fatally wounded near the battle-field, and those that could be moved were carried off by the retreating rebels.

There were seven regiments in the fight, under the immediate command of Gen. Armstrong, to wit: Colonels Adams', Pinson's, Stewart's, Jackson's, Forrest's, Barteau's and Wheeler's cavalry regiments, numbering, in the aggregate, five thousand men; while the whole number of Col. Dunn's force was but six hundred men.

FROM THE REBEL CAPITAL.

Arrival of an Old Resident of Richmond in Washington.

INTERESTING AND IMPORTANT STATEMENTS.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON CITY, Saturday, Sept. 6, 1862.

An old resident of Richmond, Va., adroitly managed to escape from the city a few days ago, and arrived here yesterday, with the latest information from the rebel capital. Of

he says the people of the loyal States have been much deceived; that after the recent battles, and the removal of our army, but few troops remained in and about the city; that, instead of numerous and imposing fortifications, there are but few, located as follows: Three miles from the city, on the Fredericksburgh Railroad, there is a small fort, mounting only three or four guns; one on the Mechanicsville Road, four miles from town, larger than any of the rest; one on "Nine-mile Road," on the south side of Richmond, and two miles from it—this fort has four guns; on the hill a little below Rockets, and commanding the river, there is another fort; and one on the Manchester side of the river completes the fortifications for the defence of Richmond. These forts are slightly-built earthworks—the embankments being about six feet high, and none of them have more than a single company of soldiers, and they are armed with none. They are all under the command of Maj Anderson.

The obstructions in the river at Fort Darling are considered perfect. A large number of vessels, some of them new, filled with stones, were sunk.

Gunboats now ply between Richmond and Fort Darling.

It was generally conceded that McClellan would take Richmond, and everybody was prepared for that event. Long trains of cars, with steam up, were kept ready for a start during the seven days' battle on the Chickahominy. The stores were closed, and the banks had removed all their money and other valuables to Danville.

Immense numbers of wounded soldiers were brought into the city. Among the killed was Maj John S. Walker and Capt. Wm. M. Harmer, of Richmond. Col. Aiken, a well-known lawyer of Richmond, was wounded at the battle of Williamsburgh, and is still limping about the city.

Beauregard has no command. Magruder and Loring have no commands. Wise is in Richmond, and generally wears citizen's dress, with the addition of a sword.

The Conscription act, now in force, embraces every man between 18 and 35 years of age. It was this act which made our informant leave Richmond.

John M. Botts was released from prison, after three months' confinement, on parole not to leave his farm near the city, or hold communication with any one not a member of his family. His friends made application to the Secretary of War for the removal of this restriction early in July, when Mr. Randolph expressed surprise at learning of its existence, declared that it had never been intended to be imposed, and restored to Mr. Botts his full liberty of circulation. Mr. Botts, however, remains in seclusion as a matter of choice. He bore his imprisonment well, and the case of the Government against him broke down disgraceefully upon his trial before the Court of Inquiry.

BUSINESS PARTIALLY SUSPENDED.

The Jacobin's death, he further informed Frank, the streets are still open, and sales are occasionally made at greatly reduced prices.

Hayati's large fleet will be at work for the Government [illegible]

[illegible] Commerce's "[illegible]" and the other ships of Manhattan, but she is work for the rebels.

The Passport Office does a good business, issuing about 100 daily. The Government has taken Tattersall's large bowling saloon and appropriated it for the same purpose. This establishment is now building the Sherman, No. 2.

NEW-PATTERN SUBMARINE.

About three months ago, a gun-carriage battery was completed, which was intended to blow up our fleet at Norfolk; it was taken down to James River, to test its utility, but upon the first trial it sunk, and could not be raised, and that was the end of the submarine battery idea.

ICE.

The city is entirely without ice, and the Government has taken Wadsworth's ice carts. He used to deal in Boston ice.

STORES CLOSED.

The impossibility of obtaining goods from the North has caused a number of stores to be closed, among them the following:

Thos. Robinson, hardware; (young Thos. Robinson was arrested for treason and sent South, but was paroled and has returned;) Kent, Paine & Co., dry goods; they are now selling tobacco at auction; Meyers, jewelry; Alfred Mayo, dry goods; Clarkson & Anderson, hardware; Sisbins & Fulin, crockery; Christian & Lathrop, dry goods; Putney, Watts & Co., shoe dealers; John C. Page, shoes; Gardner, Carlton & Co., shoes; F. K. White, shoes; Edmonds, Davenport & Co., wholesale grocers; Key, Baldwin & Williams, clothing; (house occupied as a hospital;) Wm. Ira Smith, clothing; J. & G. B. Davenport, wholesale grocers; Purcell, Lord & Co., druggists; Crenshaw & Co., grocers; Dunlop, Moncure & Co., grocers; Jackson, Winn & Co., grocers.

The Late Battles North of the Rappahannock.

From the Richmond Dispatch, Sept. 6.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA, CHANTILLY, Sept. 3, 1862.

His Excellency, Jefferson Davis, President Confederate States of America:

Mr. President—My letter of the 29th ult. will have informed your Excellency of the progress of this army to that date. Gen. Longstreet's division having arrived the day previous, was formed in order of battle on the right of Gen. Jackson, who had been engaged with the enemy since morning resisting an attack commenced on the 28th. The enemy, on the latter day, was vigorously repulsed, leaving his numerous dead and wounded on the field. His attack on the morning of the 29th was feeble, but became warmer in the afternoon, when he was again repulsed by both wings of the army. His loss on this day, as stated in his published report, heretofore inclosed, amounted to 8,000 killed and wounded.

The enemy being reinforced renewed the attack on the afternoon of the 30th, when a general advance of both wings of the army was ordered, and after a fierce combat, which raged until after 8 o'clock, he was completely defeated and driven beyond Bull Run. The darkness of the night, his destruction of the stone bridge after crossing, and the uncertainty of the fords, stopped the pursuit.

The next morning the enemy was discovered in the strong position at Centreville, and the army was put in motion toward the Little River turnpike, to turn his right. Upon reaching Ox Hill, on the 1st of September, he was again discovered in our front on the heights of Germantown, and about 5 P. M. made a spirited attack upon the extreme right of our column, with a view of apparently covering the withdrawal of his trains on the Centreville road and masking his retreat. Our position was maintained with but slight loss on both sides. Major-General Kearney was left by the enemy dead on the field. During the night the enemy fell back to Fairfax Court House, and abandoned his position at Centreville. Yesterday, about noon, he evacuated Fairfax Court House, taking the roads, as reported to me, to Alexandria and Washington.

I have, as yet, been unable to get official reports of our loss or captured in these various engagements. Many gallant officers have been killed or wounded. Of the general officers, Ewell, Trimble, Taliaferro, Fields, Jenkins and Mahone, have been reported wounded; Colonels Means, Marshall, Taylor, Neff and Gadberry, killed. About 7,000 prisoners have already been paroled, about the same number of small arms have been collected from the field, and thirty pieces of cannon captured, beside a number of wagons, ambulances, &c. A large number of arms still remain on the ground. For want of transportation valuable stores had to be destroyed as captured, while the enemy, at their various depôts, are reported to have burned many millions of property in their retreat. Nothing could surpass the gallantry and endurance of the troops, who have cheerfully borne every danger and hardship, both on the battle-field and march.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, R. E. LEE, General.

[Chantilly is north of Centreville and northwest of Fairfax Court House, about six or eight miles from each. The "letter of the 29th," referred to in the above, was not received. The Little River turnpike leads from Middleburgh to Alexandria, and intersects the Centreville turnpike about a mile this side of Fairfax Court House. Germantown is on the Little River turnpike, about half a mile west of its intersection with the Centreville turnpike.]

The following correspondence will illustrate the thoroughness of the enemy's defeat in the battle of the 30th. It bears date, as will be seen, of the next day:

CENTREVILLE, Aug. 31, 1862.

SIR: Many of the wounded of this army have been left on the field, for whom I desire to send assistance. Will you please inform me whether you consent to a truce until they are cared for?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, JOHN POPE, Major-General, United States Army, commanding.

Commanding Officer, Confederate forces, near Groveton.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA, Aug. 31, 1862.

Major-Gen. John Pope, U. S. A., commanding, &c.:

SIR: Consideration for your wounded induces me to consent to a suspension of hostilities to convey them within your lines. I cannot consent to a truce nor a suspension of military operations of this army. If you desire to send for your wounded, should your ambulances report to Dr. Guiney, medical director of this army, he will give directions for their transportation. The wounded will be paroled, and it is understood that no delay will take place in their removal.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, R. E. LEE, General.

The following letter, received at a still later date, shows what a great number of the enemy's wounded still lie upon the field of battle—four days after the engagements—notwithstanding the efforts made by Pope's officers to remove them under the permission granted by Gen. Lee. The answer of Gen. Lee to this application of Dr. Coulnes has not been communicated:

CENTREVILLE, VA., Sept 3, 1862.

Gen. Robert E. Lee, Commanding Confederate Army:

GENERAL: Medical-Director Guiney, of the Confederate Army, and Medical-Director McFarlan, of the United States Army, have just arrived here from the battle-field near Manassas. The accounts they give are far more serious than my previous information had led me to believe. Our wounded soldiers, in the number of nearly 3,000, many still lying on the field, are suffering for food. I have no commissary stores, and my supply of medical comforts are wholly inadequate. With every kindly intention and effort on the part of those under your command, the loss of life must be very great, unless food and means of transporting the wounded within our own lines are promptly supplied. I know of no source of adequate supply nearer than Washington. If, General, you can, consistently with duty, permit supplies of food and transport wagons for wounded to pass through your lines to and return from the battle-field, you will save very many lives and much suffering. If you cannot do this, I beg that you will, for humanity sake, point out some other way in which medical relief may be obtained. I am within your lines, and of course cannot provide the necessary relief without your permission.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, RICHARD H. COOLIDGE, Medical Inspector United States Army.

Four Persons Murdered Yesterday—An Offer of Aid from the Chippewas.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Saturday, Sept. 13.

Four persons were killed to-day by the Indians, near Mankato, while threshing wheat. This was done within a mile of a company of troops.

The Indians took the horses from the threshing machines, and left before the troops could reach them.

These bold exploits will prevent the farmers from returning to their crops.

Two Chippewa chiefs of Wisconsin, have tendered their services to Gov. Ramsey to fight the Sioux. It is well known that the Sioux and Chippewas have long been at war with each other.

THE REBELS IN MARYLAND.

Latest Reports from Harrisburgh and Chambersburgh.

National Troops Hurrying to the Pennsylvania Border.

Jackson Crossing the Potomac at Williamsport.

IMPORTANT FROM HARRISBURGH.

HARRISBURGH, Penn., Saturday, Sept. 13.

The authorities have received important information regarding the rebel army in Maryland from a gentleman who visited their camps, and spent considerable time within their lines.

There is no truth in the report that martial law has been proclaimed here.

Everything is progressing nicely.

Troops are still pouring in from all sections of the State, and are being armed as fast as possible, and are being sent to Camp Curtin for instruction before proceeding to Chambersburgh.

The rebels occupied Middleburgh to-day with 3,000 infantry, and were followed by large waggon trains.

The locality of the late firing is not definitely known but is supposed to have been between the rebels under Stonewall Jackson and the Federal force of 2,500 men under Col. Ware at Martinsburgh, or Col. Miles at Harper's Ferry.

Our pickets extended two miles beyond New Castle.

The rebels occupy the State line with five hundred cavalry under Lieut.-Col. Rugg.

The late movements which have been going on in various camps here and other parts of the State have resulted in the organization of a large force of cavalry, infantry, and artillery, which are now leaving for their destinations. The force is considered sufficient to protect the Cumberland Valley and check the advance of the rebels on the capital of the State.

A strong reserve force is to be retained at Camp Curtin, to march at a moment's notice, under Col. Cameron, Acting Brigadier-General.

IMPORTANT FROM CHAMBERSBURGH.

MOVEMENTS OF THE REBELS, ETC.

CHAMBERSBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 12.

Reports received this morning state that Gen. Longstreet is in command of the forces occupying Hagerstown. His force is estimated at from 4,000 to 10,000 men.

The forces under Stonewall Jackson crossed the river yesterday, at Williamsport and Clear Spring. Their numbers are stated at 15,000 men, with thirty pieces of artillery. It is supposed they intend attacking our troops at Martinsburgh.

To-day and during last night three rebels were captured by our pickets.

Everything here is quiet, and no advance this side of the State line is anticipated.

Large bodies of troops arrived this morning from Harrisburgh, and the people feel confident that the rebels will soon be driven from our soil.

CHAMBERSBURGH, Saturday, Sept. 12—11 P. M.

It is now positively known that the rebel army evacuated Frederick yesterday, passing through Boonsboro' and Hagerstown, towards Williamsport.

Eye witnesses state that the rebel column was from 9 o'clock in the morning until dark, passing a given point.

The force of the rebels, estimated by an officer who witnessed their movements, was 30,000 infantry, 5,000 cavalry, and 50 pieces of artillery.

The reports of the sickness and imprisonment of Dr. Scott and other Union citizens are contradicted, and no pecuniary of any kind has been exacted.

It was reported that Mr. Bradway's house had been entered and a Union flag, painted on the ceiling, cut out, the same party committing other depredations.

The rebels are recruiting along their line of march, and quite a number of men have joined their ranks.

A party of rebel cavalry made a dash on our pickets at the State line this forenoon and captured Jackson C. McBride of the Regular cavalry, from Carlisle Barracks.

They paroled him, telling him they were going on North in a day or two.

No advance has been made this side of the line. Gentlemen from near Martinsburg report Jackson to have crossed with his army near Williamsport on Thursday, and camped six miles west of that place on Thursday night. He had 15,000 infantry, 10,000 cavalry, and forty pieces of artillery. He did not go toward Martinsburg, but took the road to Western Virginia, it is supposed either to attack Gen. Kelly, or to cross the river at Hancock and enter Pennsylvania at a point where he thinks no troops would oppose him. He is said to have cut the telegraph and destroyed the railroad.

A wagon train six miles west of Hancock is reported as having been captured by the rebel cavalry. Another rumor is to the effect that Gen. Ware and his force, at Martinsburg, were all taken prisoners to-day, and everything up to the hour of 11 P. M. was quiet in front.

CHAMBERSBURGH, Friday, Sept. 12.

The rebels were reported advancing toward Greencastle last night at midnight, causing much excitement. The cars left there a little before daylight, crowded with citizens, who were terribly frightened at the reported close proximity. The telegraph operator also left, but returned, and communication was still open from that point.

The alarm was caused by the appearance of some rebel pickets near the Pennsylvania line. Col. McClure, commanding the post, has been busy to-day, arming all able-bodied citizens, placing officers in command, and dispatching them in different directions to guard the roads leading into this town.

The people seemed fairly crazy when the train loaded with fugitives from Greencastle arrived, and hundreds rushed to their houses, packed their trunks, and hurried back to take the train much, which was crowded to suffocation.

9 P. M.—A gentleman just arrived from Hagerstown, which place he left at 11 o'clock in the morning under a pass obtained by some "Secesh" friends. He reports that the rebel army was behaving themselves well, offering no insults to the citizens, except to the most prominent Union men, whom they arrested, and committing no depredations on private property.

The rebel soldiers would enter the stores and offer "Secesh" money, and when this was refused, they would give currency or leave.

The Union boys sang "Yankee Doodle" and other Union songs openly in the streets, telling the rebel soldiers that their stay would be short, as the Union men of the North were coming in thousands to their rescue.

No rebel soldier was allowed to address a lady in the street unless he was first spoken to.

Fifteen thousand rebel troops are said to have crossed the river at Williamsport, under Stonewall Jackson, but his wagons returned to get supplies, etc., at the different points they visited.

Reliable news has arrived that the rebels advanced to within eight miles of the relay on the Northern Central Road, eight miles west of Baltimore with the supposed intention of cutting the connection had an [illegible]

THE NATIONAL ARMY IN KENTUCKY—GEN. MAJ. LEW. WALLACE.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CAMP WITH-AWHILE, CARROLL COUNTY, KY., Wednesday, September 10, 1862.

Cincinnati is now the rival of Washington in point of military interest—the rebels having selected it as the first point of attack in their effort to carry the war out of Africa. Having exhausted every means of subsistence in their own land, they look with longing eyes upon the rich granaries and manufactories of the Northwest. The Queen City, like the land of Canaan, is even now overflowing with milk and honey; its warehouses are crammed with all manner of subsistence, and its army depots contain vast supplies of munitions of war, clothing, and indeed of everything needed in camp and exhaustive campaign, and to hands outside millions of ready money, all of which things the rebels covet and long to possess, regardless of the requirements of the Ninth Commandment. No sooner was the danger of the rebels discovered, than the whole city abandoned all their ordinary vocations and devoted themselves to the business of war. The defenses which have sprung up on the Kentucky hills, as if by magic, are of the most formidable character, indeed, I feel sorry that I cannot give a particular description thereof, as an evidence of the energy of the Forkopolitans, and an example to all other cities. I do not believe that Kirby Smith will face the intrenchments, nor do I think that he will attempt to attack Cincinnati by any direct route, but rather look to cross the Ohio and lord it over the country in the rear of the city. That the country between Covington and Lexington abounds with guerrillas we all believe, but they do not venture down as exempt in the form of spies, and their duty is very small parties. Our pickets get neared almost every night, and we are kept as sleepless as any who wake can desire. Most of the lodges have are utterly without trans, personal conveniences, and many other military necessities. They have been hurried from the enrolling offices almost any estate. Many of the regiments are incomplete, having no more than six or seven companies. Their chief are mostly Austrian rifles. We have plenty of artillery, including heavy siege guns, the use of which, in the present emergency, cannot be comprehended by your correspondent. The army is rapidly acquiring discipline. The Eighty-third Regiment has Jesse Clapp, for so a year years drill-master at Governor's Island, as its instructor. It is needless to say that under his tuition they are advancing rapidly. That the rebels are bent on storming Cincinnati is very sure is certain, but the means by which they hope to do so, are not so evident. One thing is certain, Kirby Smith's army was badly demoralized when it entered the Blue Grass region, and that his prestige was needed to recruit the physical condition of his forces. He is also recruiting rapidly, for "you see Green" has never been loyal. At best, it was in the the Apocalyptic Church of Laodicea, lukewarm, neither hot nor cold, "falling from grace and unable to tell which way to turn, and praying for the return of the good time. I wrote you in November that good policy required the vigorous prosecution of the Cumberland Gap expedition, and I am now convinced that 10,000 men at said place have done much toward the defeat of the N. without that 10,000 can now do. Had the army under Gen. Sumner advanced, instead of making that disastrous retreat, the Northwest would have been saved a vast deal of vexation, and more done toward crushing the rebellion than has yet been accomplished by any one expedition. But red tape and "everything worse" prevailed over sound discretion; the army retreated, and was disgraced in the eyes of the whole nation, a movement that has never yet been retrieved. Only reputation. But with all the embarrassment that surrounded this army, we have much that is glorious to boast. It will hardly be credited that we are absolutely suffering for water. The regiment in which "You, Truly" is quartered, cannot obtain any water fit to drink, and none at all for washing. I never saw the demoralizing effect of a dirty shirt so vividly as I do now.

REPORTS FROM CAIRO.

The following is a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune:

CAIRO, Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1862.

Gen. Hamilton's Division commenced moving yesterday, destination unknown. In fact, it is reasonable to suppose it will not go far.

Twenty refugees from Fayette County, Ala., arrived last evening. They left about ten days since, and by traveling nightmost lying by in the day time, they succeeded, after much tribulation, in reaching the Federal lines, where they took the oath of allegiance and received a passport for Cairo. They say the conscription act is clearing the country of men between the ages of fifteen and forty-five, and that immense numbers are being sent to the Confederate army.

The Confederate prisoners from Chicago left for Vicksburgh this evening, convoyed by a ram and a gunboat.

A soldier, returned from Corinth to-day, reports that the railroad between that place and Iuka is in the possession of the rebels.

There was a little skirmish at Horse Lake, Miss., yesterday. Federal cavalry pickets were fired on while taking breakfast. A Lieutenant shot of his nose was killed. The Confederates scattered.

On Tuesday, the steamer White Cloud, down the Cumberland River for cotton, was fired upon from some rebels below the city, by guerrillas. No damage done.

The steamer Planet, up from below, says that when at Commerce they were informed that the people of that place intended to fire on them. They don't like to have their sympathies and wants so well understood.

The Memphis Bulletin of Saturday, Sept. 6, says: "We have got all—big and small—numbering, we have been informed, twenty-seven rebel steamers in the Mississippi within sight of Gen. Pillow's entrenchments. Orders for immediate destruction.

Twelve hundred exchanged prisoners arrived at Vicksburgh on the 1st inst.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Journal, of the 26th, says a schooner with a cargo of salt from Nassau, while attempting to run the blockade, was captured by our cruisers.

CAPTURE OF THE TERRY ON THE TENNESSEE.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, writing under date of Hamburgh, Sept. 5, gives the following account of the capture of the steamer Terry by the rebels:

"The Terry had left this place about the 27th ult., in company with the Dunmore City and the gunboat Alfred Red, ostensibly on Government business, but really to take down a cargo of cotton for a speculator. The Dunmore City went for commissary supplies. A detachment of twenty men of the Eighty-first Ohio was placed on the Dunmore City, and ten on the gunboat. On the way down, the Terry entangled the gunboat, which stuck for twenty-four hours on the shoals, and was so slow that before it reached Pittsburgh it met the Terry returning, and as it was obliged to go for repairs, it transferred the ten riflemen to the protection of the Terry.

On Saturday night the steamer came in the vicinity of the shoals, and being afraid to run through in the night, anchored in the middle of the river. On Sunday she tried to go through, but stuck; and after pulling off, and sticking again and again, finally found herself resting at bow and stern on rocks, when Sunday night came. Five men of the Eighty-first Ohio were sent ashore as pickets by Sergeant Mason, Company B, while the remainder kept in readiness for action aboard. The night passed without adventure, except the firing of three or four guns at a distance. But at daybreak the pickets, who were posted in a field of high weeds, discovered a large force on foot, almost on them. From the direction in which they came, they cut off the retreat of the pickets in the boat, and made their way directly for the boat without resistance. From the bank, which was higher than the boat, they poured down their fire without let or hindrance. Two shots were fired from the cannon aboard the Terry, but from the position they were unable to do any service. The passengers took refuge on the other side of the boat, which now lay helpless before the eyes of the yelling rebels. After firing several rounds they ceased, and the steamer was theirs. With it they captured two excellent Wiard guns, 6-pounders, with seventy rounds of shot and shell, several barrels of whisky and other goods belonging to a citizen of Savannah, who was aboard.

The steamer had no Government property aboard except a lot of coal. Of prisoners they took sixteen—six of the Eighty-first Ohio, as follows: Sergt. S. T. Mace, Co. B; Corp. Woodworth, Co. F; Privates C. Cooper, Co. F; C. W. Allington, Co. F; Jamison Mapberry, Co. E; Joseph H. Taylor, Co. E.

THE GUN SQUAD.

The other ten were members of the gun-squad, of Hamburgh. This is an institution which deserves particular mention. Some loose, unattached cannon having collected here, a few stray soldiers from Post hospital and elsewhere were assigned to duty to take care of them. Sergeant Carr, of the 12th Indiana Battery, who is in command, is a man of forty-five years of age, and very attentive to his duty, caring for his cosmopolitan command so well, that I fear they do not try very hard to join their regiments. In the language of one of them, "he has been both father, captain and soldier; and it is not wonderful that the handful of them that remains is inconsolable for his loss. 'To think,' says one, 'how it would mortify him, when he was so anxious to use his guns against the rebels, that he should be pinioned, as it were, to that rock, and be unable to make a single effective shot.'

There were ten of the squad captured, as follows: Sergt. Isaac Clipp, Twelfth Indiana Battery; Corp. Wm. Brasmer, Seventh Missouri; privates W. H. H. Streetland, Forty-fifth Illinois; H. J. Lindsey, Second Indiana Cavalry; G. W. H. Huffington, Second Indiana Cavalry; L. D. Fisher, Third Ohio Cavalry; N. Lindsey, Sixteenth Iowa; W. McDaniell, Forty-sixth Ohio, and James Sweeney, Twelfth Indiana Battery.

This casualty leaves Sergt. Carrington, of the Sixth Ohio, (Guthrie Grey Regiment,) in command of all that remains of Sergt. Carr's Battery.

THE PICKETS ESCAPE—A LONG MARCH THROUGH DIXIE.

As before stated, the pickets, all but one, were cut off from the boat, and as the chimneys of the steamer were of the most interest to the robbers, they were able to escape under cover of the high weeds, to a place on the bank of the river, from which they could see and hear all of the battle. Here they saw with mortification the few easy capture, and the fact stared them in the face, that a march of a hundred miles, through a country infested with guerrillas, was before them. There were four of them, Corporal Wm. F. Dwyer, and Privates Thos. N. Watts, of Co. C, and Privates Jacob Rice and —— Wagoner, of Co. E. The latter was wounded in two places, and carried both balls with him, but was not disabled, one ball being in the shoulder and the other through the arm near the wrist. Threading cautiously the river bank they went until they were out of reach of the guerrillas, who were fully occupied with their prize, they, with a regret, cast their trusty Enfields into the Tennessee and assumed the role of deserters. By this ruse they passed without molestation until they found a squad of men whom they had reason to believe were Union. To them they opened their hearts and were advised to go to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. This they did, reaching it on Thursday at Henderson. Thence by rail to Corinth, from which place they walked hither to-day, nothing are much, who had indeed endured hardness as good soldiers.

PROSPECTS FOR OPENING THE BLOCKADE.

Passengers who were on the boat and released, say that it was not burnt when they left, and that the captors said they were going to run it themselves. They had it afloat in twenty-five minutes after boarding. With the two Wiard guns, and the steamer to move troops, they may make it difficult for anything short of a gunboat to pass the shoals, or "sucks" as they are called. Prompt action must be made, however, for a light-draft gunboat is coming up the river, and a land force will go down the river to attack them in the rear. We have reliable information that all this trouble is occasioned by a small force encamped on Duck River, a few miles from its mouth, and it is to be hoped that we may soon hear of their total rout."

THE ARMY OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Rumors of a Coming Movement—Gen. Rosecrans at Iuka—The Position of Gen. Ord—Contraction of Our Lines—The Enemy at Gainesville, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION ARMY OF THE MISSISSIPPI, JACKSON, TENNESSEE, Thursday, Sept. 4, 1862.

The bulk of the great Army of the West is still inactive, although rumors have been circulating around the various headquarters to the effect that a movement of some kind was on the tapis. Brig. Gen. ROSECRANS has moved forward to Iuka, and the main share of his force will act as a support to Buell, whose position has been supposed to be precarious, as the enemy has made several attempts to turn his flank and cut off his supplies by Railroad.

From the position of the army of the Missouri, the country, and along the different railroads, they have had a large amount of territory to guard and keep under subjection. The several army corps have been spread out like a fan along the Mobile and Ohio Railroad to Rigby in the southwest, and thence eastwardly to Iuka. A contraction of the lines is now taking place, and we shall soon be so feeling to return of active operations.

We are now threatened with a new military chieftain by the name of ARMSTRONG, who, if possible, is more of a fiendish than HINDMAN of Arkansas. The former is useless his soldiers to commit every species of outrage, to murder, to plunder, to pillage, to rob on the highways and when to battle to show the Rational to no quarter. He is inflicting the most atrocious depredations upon the citizens of the South, and they are crowding within our lines by hundreds to seek that protection, which, under the sway of the modest Confederacy, is denied them. The most of these fugitives are in a state of the greatest destitution and wretchedness, having been robbed by the land pirates of everything.

Yesterday a scouting party of the Second Iowa Cavalry made a reconnoissance toward Grenfowe, and found the enemy's pickets stationed at various points. From the reports of deserters and others the enemy number from 20,000 to 30,000, and are under the command of Gen. PRICE, of Missouri fame. They are but poorly provided with arms, and consequently

THE BATTLE OF BRITTON'S LANE.

Five Hundred of the Twentieth and Thirtieth Illinois Defeat Five Thousand Rebels.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

JACKSON, TENN., Friday, Sept. 5.

Your readers have been informed by telegraph of the recent raids of Indianan forces of rebel guerrillas along our whole line at different points, of their repulse, and of a skirmish having occurred between a large force of rebel cavalry and the forces under Col. DAVIS, consisting of the Twentieth and Thirtieth Illinois Infantry, a battery of artillery, and one company of cavalry, in which the rebels were driven back; but this does not tell the tale, but leaves an impression that it was but an ordinary affair. Instead of its being a skirmish, it was one of the fiercest and most brilliant little battles yet recorded in this fearful struggle for constitutional liberty.

This fight took place at a place known as Britton's Lane, near SWEZEREY's school-house, twelve miles southwest from Jackson, and four miles south of the village of Denmark.

THE APPROACH AND PREPARATIONS FOR ATTACK.

Col. DAVIS' command,—which consisted of the remains of the Thirtieth Illinois Infantry, commanded by Major SMITH, and Twentieth Illinois Infantry, commanded by Capt. FRASER; portions of two companies of the Ohio Cavalry, commanded by Capt. FOSTER, and two pieces of SCHWARZE's Battery, 6-pounders, JAMES' rifle,—were stationed at Estanauls Ferry, twenty miles from Jackson, on the Hatchie River, to guard the ford or crossing. Expecting that they would be attacked by a large force of the enemy, on Sunday morning last, Col. LAWLER ordered the force to fall back on Jackson. Col. DAVIS immediately took up a line of march, and reached a point four miles east of Denmark by evening, where his troops rested for a short time. Here orders were received to countermarch to Medon Station via Denmark and the Clover Creek road. They at once renewed their march, and went as far as Denmark, and lay on their arms, on the western outskirts of the town, over night.

Next morning, at daylight, they again resumed their line of march on the Clover Creek Road, in the following order of march: Foster's Cavalry, advance guard; Twentieth Illinois Infantry, in advance of artillery and baggage and provision train; and Thirtieth Illinois Infantry in the rear. After this march was taken up, another order was received to advance to Clover Creek and endeavor to intercept and cut off a large force of rebel cavalry which had been engaging our troops at Medon Station early that morning, and was then retreating toward Clover Creek. By some mismanagement of their guide, the wrong road was taken, which led through the woods to Britton's Lane. The train had become somewhat scattered by this time, as the advance halted in a below half a mile from the lane, until the train came up.

THE BATTLE.

FOSTER'S Cavalry, which reconnoitered the ground, entered the lane about 10 o'clock A. M., and discovered the enemy's skirmishers posted in the cornfield to the left of the road, and immediately engaged them, and held their position until the Twentieth came up, a few minutes afterwards. Col. DAVIS ordered the artillery to be posted in the road, so as to command the lane, and the Twentieth Regiment to support it; whereupon a line of battle was formed in the timber to the right of the road, occupying a favorable ridge.

The artillery was no sooner posted than they began to play upon the enemy, or in the direction indicated by the rising dust.

After our line of battle was formed, Capt. FOSTER, with his cavalry, advanced to discover the position of the enemy, but they had gone but a short distance before they were met and driven back by a force which advanced on a desperate charge, four deep and three thousand strong, and, as was afterward learned, with the expectation of riding over our force. They had sent out large detachments to our right and left, for the purpose of picking up all stragglers, and thus begging the whole command. Though they came tearing up the road and through the fields, discharging volley after volley, not a shot was fired from our men till they had come up in full view, at about one hundred yards distance, and had nearly all discharged their pieces, which fortunately were shot over our men, when our men commenced to fire, and poured into the rebel ranks such a deadly fire that their advance was immediately checked. About one hundred medics were emptied, and the rebels fell back in disorder and disorder. They, however, soon rallied again, and a second, and more sanguinary charge was made on our whole line, advancing on our flank with stronger force than before. A similar reception to the first was given to them by our men, who, they came knowingly, and better prepared than at first on both our flanks. A desperate hand-to-hand encounter ensued. The rebels rushed in among our brave boys in largely superior numbers, and took many of them prisoners; but prisoners it was determined they should not remain if their ransom could be purchased by desperation and bloodshed. Our men fought like pent-up tigers, and most of those who were captured were released by their comrades, all fighting to release each other—and most admirably they succeeded. One Captain of the Twentieth, whose company was completely surrounded, was approached by a rebel Captain, who presented a pistol at his head, demanding his surrender; but our hero was too foon for him, for the words had no sooner passed from his lips than the gallant Captain of the Twentieth shot him dead from off his house.

The rebels succeeded, in this charge, in capturing our cannon and most of our transportation train; but the guns had been abandoned a short time before, and all the ammunition destroyed, so that they could not use them against us.

It was in the heat of this desperate conflict that the Thirtieth Regiment, (which was over a mile and a half distant in the rear at the commencement of the fight,) led by the gallant Maj. SMITH, came rushing up in a double quick, with such a yell as only the conquerors can give. Then came the tug of war. These two exemplary regiments, which have fought together on every hard-fought field from Frederick-town to the last skirmish before Corinth, were again side by side, each vying with the other in deeds of daring, but neither desirous to excel. This encounter lasted about half an hour, when the rebels were again repulsed and fell back, without having broken our lines, except a portion on the flanks.

In this charge the enemy had fully discovered our position, and Col. DAVIS having ridden out in the open, discovered that the rebels were dismounting for a demonstration on foot. Under these circumstances it was deemed advisable to change position to prevent our right wing from being turned. Capt. FOSTER accordingly moved his regiment to the right, with his right flank drawn back so as to form a crescent or horse-shoe, with his right resting down a slope in the timber, leaving a gap at the point last occupied, to be protected by the Thirtieth Regiment, which was a little to the left of the corn-field. Skirmishers were also thrown out from the Thirtieth into the corn-field to the left, so as to make it appear that they were the advance of another regiment.

A precaution was taken to instruct the men to hold their fire until the enemy came in within short musket range, which was religiously complied with, and for each man to take cover behind a tree whenever it was convenient.

But a short time elapsed before another charge was made by the rebels, mounted and on foot. As was anticipated, the main body of the enemy moved on the position last held by our men, and, owing to the dense cloud of dust continually driving, were unable to discover the change that had taken place, so they opened a fierce fire on the ground before occupied, killing and wounding nobody, while our boys poured in a murderous volley, and, as they advanced, along the line, dropped the rebels from their horses like leaves falling in an Autumn wind.

The main body of the rebels was, as before, driven back, but they succeeded in gaining a little ground on our right, which gave them considerable advantage. Capt. FOSTER saw at once that it would not do to suffer them to hold this position, so he called out for volunteers to follow him and drive the rebels from the hill. The response was a noble one. The men of the Twentieth nearly all rushed forward, led by the dauntless Captain, and, with a yell, opened fire on the enemy and advanced upon their position from which the rebels fled like frightened deer. When this was done on on the right, the Thirtieth, on the left, were receiving another charge from overwhelming numbers, which was met like the former ones. Three other charges were made subsequently, but all to no purpose, and after four hours of the most desperate fighting on record, a Union force of not more than five hundred was successful in defeating and driving from the field a rebel force of from four to five thousand, leaving one hundred and seventy-nine dead rebels on the field, as actual count. The number of their wounded is not known, but the proportionate number would be from three to four hundred, many of whom have since died. Capt. Clements, who subsequently rallied the skirmishers, found in the vicinity of the fight twenty of the rebel wounded, reports that they are to be found in every house from five miles this side of the battle-ground to the Tennessee shore; that they were so thick on the road, that he was compelled to dismount and remove them from his path, and that the people of all North may look for stirring times in the near future in this country. The different divisions are under marching orders, and the men are in the best of spirits. The health of the troops remarkably good.

IMPORTANT FROM CINCINNATI.

The Rebel Army Retreating in Confusion.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, Sept. 13.

The rebel army has fallen back beyond Florence.

Some stragglers taken by our scouts say they had 80,000 men, while others say that only 16,000 crossed to this side of Florence, under Gen. BRAGG.

The prisoners say the raid of the rebels was made because they had heard of Gen. BUELL's presence in Kentucky, and had not heard from Gen. BRAGG.

Arrival of an Old Resident of Richmond in Washington.

INTERESTING AND IMPORTANT STATEMENTS.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON CITY, Saturday, Sept. 6, 1862.

An old resident of Richmond, Va., adroitly managed to escape from the city a few days ago, and arrived here yesterday, with the latest information from the rebel capital. Of

he says the people of the loyal States have been much deceived; that after the recent battles, and the removal of our army, but few troops remained in and about the city; that, instead of numerous and immense fortifications, there are but few, located as follows: These miles from the city, on the Fredericksburgh Railroad, there is a small fort, mounting only three or four guns; one on the Mechanicsville Road, four miles from town, larger than any of the rest; one on "Nine-mile Road," on the south side of Richmond, and two miles from it—this fort has four guns; on the hill a little below Rockets, and commanding the river, there is another fort; and one on the Manchester side of the river completes the fortifications for the defence of Richmond. These forts are slightly-built earthworks—the embankments being about six feet high, and none of them have more than a single company of soldiers, and they are armed with ploughs. They are all under the command of Maj. ARMISTEAD.

Gunboats now ply between Richmond and Fort Darling.

It was generally conceded that McCLELLAN would take Richmond, and everybody was prepared for that event. Long trains of cars, with steam up, were kept ready for a start during the seven days' battle on the Chickahominy. The stores were closed, and the banks had removed all their money and other valuables to Danville.

Immense numbers of wounded soldiers were brought into the city. Among the killed was Maj. JOHN S. WALKER and Capt. WM. M. HARRISON, of Richmond. Col. ARCHER, a well-known lawyer of Richmond, was wounded at the battle of Williamsburgh, and is still limping about the city.

BEAUREGARD has no command. MAGRUDER and LOVELL have no commands. WISE is in Richmond, and generally wears citizen's dress, with the addition of a sword.

The Conscription act, now in force, embraces every man between 18 and 35 years of age. It was this act which made our informant leave Richmond.

JOHN M. BOTTS was released from prison, after three months' confinement, on parole not to leave his farm near the city, or hold communication with any one not a member of his family. His friends made application to the Secretary of War for the removal of this restriction early in July, when Mr. HARRISON expressed surprise at learning of its existence, declared that it had never been intended to be imposed, and restored to Mr. BOTTS his full liberty of circulation. Mr. BOTTS, however, remains in seclusion as a matter of choice. He bears his imprisonment well; and the case of the Government against him broke down disgracefully upon his trial before the Court of Inquiry.

BUSINESS PARTIALLY SUSPENDED.

The dissecession is dull; the auction houses in Franklin street are still open, and sales are occasionally made at greatly reduced prices.

HANKS's large flour mill is at work for the Government, and so is the mill of WARRICK & BARRIDALE; CARRINGTON's woolen mill, and the cotton mills at Manchester, are also at work for the army.

The Tredegar Works are in full operation manufacturing arms. The Government has also bought TEXSAR's large foundry and establishment, and are using it for the same purpose. This establishment is now building the Merrimac No. 2.

SUB-MARINE BATTERIES.

About three months ago, a sub-marine battery was completed, which was intended to blow up our fleet at Norfolk; it was taken down to James River, to test its utility, but upon the first trial it sunk, and could not be raised, and that was the end of the sub-marine battery idea.

ICE.

The city is entirely without ice, and the Government has taken WADSWORTH's ice party. He need to deal in Boston ice.

STORES CLOSED.

The impossibility of obtaining goods from the North has caused a number of stores to be closed, among them the following:

Thos. Robinson, hardware; Young Thos. Robinson was arrested for treason and sent South, but was paroled and has returned; Kent, Paine & Co., dry goods; they are now selling tobacco at auction; Meyers, jewelry; Alfred Moses, dry goods; Chatteson & Anderson, hardware; Stebbins & Pullin, crockery; Christian & Lathrop, dry goods; Rainey, Watts & Co., shoe dealers; John C. Page, shoes; Gardner, Carlton & Co., shoes; F. M. White, shoes; Edmonds, Davenport & Co., wholesale grocers; Kay, Baldwin & Williams, clothing; Adams (couplet of a musical); Wm. Ira Smith, clothing; T. & G. B. Davenport, wholesale grocers; Parcell, Lund & Co., druggists; Crenshaw & Co., grocers; Dunlop, Moncure & Co., grocers; Boston, Wise & Co., grocers.

The Late Battles North of the Rappahannock.

From the Richmond Dispatch, Sept. 6.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY NORTHERN VIRGINIA, CHARLOTTESVILLE, Sept. 3, 1862.

Mr. President: I have the honor to inform your Excellency that the enemy's army has retired from the battle-field near Manassas. The accounts they give are far more serious than my previous information had led me to believe. Our wounded soldiers, to the number of nearly 2,000, many still lying on the field, are suffering for food. I have no commissary stores, and my supply of medical comforts are wholly inadequate. With every kindly intention and effort on the part of those under your command, the loss of life must be very great, unless food and means of transporting the wounded within our own lines are promptly supplied. I know of no source of adequate supply nearer than Washington. If, General, you can, consistently with duty, permit supplies of food and transport wagons for wounded to pass through your lines to and return from the battle-field, you will save very many lives and much suffering. If you cannot do this, I beg that you will, at the nearest point, set some other way in which medical relief may be obtained. I am within your lines, and of course cannot provide the necessary relief without your consent.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant, RICHARD H. COOLIDGE, Medical Inspector United States Army.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

The Exchange of Prisoners Still Proceeding.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, Sept. 12.

One hundred and eleven rebel prisoners were sent to Aiken's Landing to-day, for exchange. They were those taken near Suffolk the week before last.

A sufficient number of steamers went up with a flag of truce to bring down the six thousand Union prisoners awaiting transports.

MORE INDIAN ATROCITIES.

Four Persons Murdered Yesterday—An Offer of Aid from the Chippewas.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Saturday, Sept. 13.

Four persons were killed to-day by the Indians near Mankato, while threshing wheat. This was done within a mile of a company of troops.

The Indians took the horses from the threshing machines, and left before the troops could reach them.

These bold exploits will prevent the farmers from returning to their crops.

Two Chippewa chiefs, of Wisconsin, have tendered their services to Gov. RAMSEY to fight the Sioux. It is well known that the Sioux and Chippewas have long been at war with each other.
